FROM THE BATTLE FIELD.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 3—Evening.

Eleven hundred general prisoners, some of whom were taken by the enemy on the battle on Thursday, arrived late this evening at Aqueduct Bridge, Georgetown, and report that Gen. LEE has established his headquarters three miles beyond Bull Run, on the Warrenton Turnpike. The only force at Fairfax was Stuart's Cavalry, he being there in person.

The rebels collect the men in the vicinity of each other, but slight, which they stripped of their clothing with the exception of their pants. Our men say the country all the way from Manassas Junction to Centreville is strewn with our killed and wounded. Our men saw the soldiers of the enemy marching to the rear on the Warrenton turnpike, toward Thoroughfare Gap.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Sept. 2.

The city, to-night, was in a state of great excitement, and not without most substantial cause. Crowds were gathered at all the bulletins, and on the corners, discussing and speculating on the future.

It may here be said that while the more timid or over-anxious apprehend danger from the rebel movements, there are most hearty who are not intimidated.

Last night there was a series of skirmishes along the whole front, during which we lost two of our best officers, and other valuable officers. According to prevalent reports, it was HOOKER'S Division which was mainly if not altogether engaged in driving back the rebels; but the one mile of skirmishing was attended with much loss of life.

At 4 o'clock this morning a train of one hundred wagons, with Commissary stores, was intercepted by the enemy between Fairfax and Centreville, and taken off toward Manassas before the party could be overtaken. They secured the entire train. So soon as this raid in the rear of our army at Centreville was known, the necessity of guarding that direction became apparent, and at noon the whole army of Virginia had abandoned Centreville, and were encamped this side of Fairfax Court-house. At noon they again took up the line of march, and this evening the advance was in sight of Munson's Hill. The enemy's cavalry followed them in the distance, but did not attack, and the entire movement was made in excellent order.

At noon to-day Gen. McCLELLAN rode out to meet the returning column, and was received with great demonstrations of gratification and pleasure by the army.

The works for the defence of Washington are all in an excellent condition, and are strongly manned by artillery and infantry. The gunboats now in the Potomac are stationed designed to prevent any attempt to interrupt the navigation of that river.

The Cabinet meeting to-day was long continued, and gives rise to the conviction that it had extraordinary and pressing business. The Government is evidently putting forth every energy for the city's defence, so that we may expect there is no panic here, but of course there is naturally a generally anxious feeling regarding the future.

FROM OUR CORRESPONDENTS ON THE FIELD.

Operations of the Rebels in Maryland—Gen. Stevens—The Battle of Thursday—Gallantry of Our Men in Person—Gen. Reno Fighting Like a Lion—Capture of Wagons—Loss of our Supply Trains.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 3, 1862.

Gentlemen who left Fairfax Court-house at 10 o'clock, Yesterday, we learn the particulars of the death of Brig.-Gen. ISAAC I. STEVENS, of Oregon.

Gen. Stevens' Brigade was twice dispatched from Centreville to drive back a body of the enemy, who had made their appearance about two and a half miles this side of the latter place, toward Fairfax Court-house, which seemed intending with our transportation, and cut off our supply train. While at the head of his brigade, cheering the enemy through the woods, he was struck in the breast by a Minié ball, and fell from his horse.

His aid, a Captain in the New-York Seventy-ninth, and at the time Acting Assistant Adjutant-General of the brigade, was wounded, but how badly our informant could not ascertain.

The rebels were finally driven from their position, and Stevens was taken to the rear.

The bodies of a rebel Colonel and the First Lieutenant were found in the woods this morning. Our informant could not ascertain their names.

A wounded rebel prisoner states that the rebel force in the fight on Monday evening was commanded by JACKSON in person. The attack was made by the rebels, at a point between Centreville and Fairfax Court-house, about 4½ in the afternoon, and continued until dark, when the rebels were driven back in disorder and left, with considerable loss.

The forces engaged on our side were part of Gen. RENO'S and Gen. KEARNEY'S Divisions, with Gen. STEVENS' Brigade in the advance. The following regiments were engaged: First, Fourth, Twenty-eighth and One Hundred and First New-York; Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, and Third and Fourth Maine.

Early on Monday morning, Stuart's rebel cavalry made a dash upon our supply train, about half way between Fairfax Court-house and Centreville, and captured one hundred wagons loaded with commissary stores. From this fact, probably arose the rumor that a battle had been fought.

A surgeon, who was taken prisoner by the rebels on Friday last, succeeding, yesterday, in making his escape to this city. He states that the rebels robbed him of all the money, watch, and case of surgical instruments, compelling him to submit to this treatment, and giving him to understand that during the four days he was a prisoner, have had very little to eat.

A portion of Gen. BANKS' corps was also in the fight.

BULL RUN BATTLE-GROUND, Sunday, Aug. 31, 1862.

I am, as you will perceive by the above date, in the midst of stirring scenes, and events transpire with more rapidity than the most rapid phonographer could indite. I shall not attempt, at this time, to furnish you with many details which would be of great interest to your readers, because these cannot be given at this time without exposing some facts which at least for the present, should not be known, and because I have neither the time or conveniences to enable me to do justice to the subject.

In a word, JACKSON'S rebel force (estimated at 70,000 men, with an immense supply of artillery) is in a corner where it cannot escape, except through our lines. His rear is against the mountains bordering Thoroughfare Gap, on the Manassas Junction Railroad, and the Gap, which is only wide enough for a single wagon-road, with impassable hills on either side, is most effectually blockaded by rocks, timber at the sides of the Gap, and the pass filled with the debris. A portion of McDOWELL'S command also stands ready to render any attempt to unclinch without artillery a very dangerous undertaking. In front of the rebel force are KEARNY, HOOKER'S, REYNOLDS'S, part of OX'S, and RICKETT'S Divisions, with BANKS' Division as a reserve, near Catlett's Station. The series of engagements which had commenced the previous Wednesday, on the banks of the Rappahannock, were concluded on Sunday evening, when a large force of the enemy turned our right flank by crossing above the Warrenton or Sulphur Springs, with the evident intention of sweeping down our flank and rear, which, had they been able to accomplish, would have been fatal to our army. This flank movement, though most skillfully executed, failed in its main object, and because of the non-arrival of HOOKER'S and KEARNY'S Divisions in time, Gen. POPE was compelled to do the next best thing, which was to hold the enemy in check until the expected reinforcements arrived. The rebel army gradually made a northerly direction, toward White Plains, (we keeping following closely,) with a view of uniting with EWELL'S command, who had crossed the Rappahannock at the base of the Blue Ridge, and was making haste to get through Thoroughfare Gap. EWELL'S Division, (late McDOWELL'S,) which had been ordered up from the center (near the Rappahannock Station) to the right on Sunday, returned through Warrenton on Monday, passed through Baltimore on the old Alexandria turnpike, his advance reaching the Thoroughfare Gap Thursday, just in time to obstruct the passage of EWELL'S command. A desperate fight took place at the Gap between the Second Regiment of Sharpshooters, (Col. POE, of New-York,) which was the commencement of active hostilities in the new location. In the fight, which lasted two hours, (until nightfall,) the Brooklyn Fourteenth was prominently engaged, and supported Regular Battery B. Gen. POE only wanted the enemy kept at bay for five hours, for KEARNEY'S and HOOKER'S Divisions to come up, and to let them pass through and fall into the trap prepared for them. How admirably the plan succeeded, you have read at the commencement of this letter, by the position of affairs as they stand to-day. Late at night KING'S Division, having accomplished the object of its mission, fell back four miles to near the Manassas Junction Railroad, and EWELL and his cohorts promptly marched through the Gap. During the night KEARNEY'S and HOOKER'S Divisions came up, and took a position at the left of KING'S command. A desperate engagement was fought at this point the next day, Friday—the rebels 55,000 strong, it is said, commanded by Gen. HILL—our troops holding their ground at nightfall.

HOOKER'S Division reached Warrenton Junction on Monday last, and on Wednesday—the day after the destructive raid by the rebels upon the Orange and Alexandria Railroad—marched toward Catlett's Station, where, at 12 o'clock M., the commands of PATTERSON and SICKLES—the latter commanded by Col. NELSON TAYLOR, late Democratic candidate for Congress in the Third New-York District—became engaged with a strong rebel force, posted in a belt of pine woods westerly of the railroad, with a battery of four pieces protecting the track itself. Our artillery had not come up, but nevertheless our troops went at the work with spirit, drove the enemy from the woods at the point of the bayonet, when the Fourth and Second Regiments of SICKLES' command plunged forward in the face of a deadly fire, and without the aid of artillery, promptly captured the battery that had made such havoc in their ranks, and treated their enemies to a little artillery practice with the same guns. This was one of the most spirited and desperate charges made during the whole war. The engagement lasted one hour and fifteen minutes, when the rebels retreated toward Manassas Junction. Our loss, owing to the strong position of the enemy, was much greater, undoubtedly, than theirs. Our loss is estimated at three hundred—some say six hundred—sixty of whom were killed. A full list of the killed and wounded cannot be obtained for some days yet. Among the killed are Lieut. MINZER, Company E, Second Excelsior; Lieut. LOWSTEAD, Company G, Second Excelsior. Wounded—Lieut.-Col. POTTER, in command of Second Excelsior; Adjutant FOWLE, Second Excelsior; Capt. GAZZO, Company D, Second Excelsior. After the fight, and the balance of the division having come up, the whole command moved forward to Manassas Junction, and last night occupied a prominent position in the section drawn around the rebel force.

REYNOLDS'S Division, which was in the retrograde movement from Culpeper, crossed the Rappahannock Monday night, and during the Rappahannock battle occupied a position near the centre, on the following Saturday (last) went to Warrenton, thence to Sulphur Springs, returned and camped near Washington on Monday, Tuesday noon marched in the direction of Harrsmarket, and after some fighting on Wednesday, is in the position this A. M. indicated above.

It is Sunday, and both armies are busily occupied in removing the wounded and burying the dead who fell in the desperate battle of yesterday, (Saturday,) which lasted from an early hour in the morning until darkness compelled the contending forces to cease the work of carnage. So in this hour only one gun has been fired to-day, and that was a 20-pound shot sent into a squadron of cavalry who seemed to make a dash through the strong line of sentinels that became them in. The unusual had the desired effect. There is a current report this morning that STUART, with 3,000 of his cavalry, got out of their cage last night through SIGEL'S command. If they did escape, rely upon it they did not make a break at the part indicated. Bull Run bridge is now being repaired, and the cars will soon be running to Manassas Junction, again. To-morrow—who shall foretell of the morrow!—another desperate battle, doubtless, and in the end a complete triumph of the Union arms. No one here doubts the result. Still, the rebels are desperate and slippery, and may possibly get out of their present position. But I do not see how they can escape until they fire upon our army. That they cannot do.

We expect a few additional names of killed and wounded, picked up at sundown: Lieut.-Col. BARNES, 27th New-York, (Col. BURGES) wounded at Manassas Junction, and taken prisoner; Capt. MOORE, Co. A 27th New-York; C. VERPLANK, Co. I, 27th New-York, slightly injured by spent ball. Lieut. STRONG, of Co. H, Lieut. DUNCAN, of Co. F, and Lieut. HENDRICKSON, of the 27th New-York, are safe. At the Manassas skirmish nearly all the members of Co. A, D, I and K, of the 27th New-York, were captured, together with Lieut.-Col. BARNES, Capts. LEGGE, JOHNSON, SCHUYLER, and LEVERETT, (brother-in-law of Alderman Strong, Brooklyn;) Lieut. Judge, Co. I, Adj. HUGHES, Sergt.-Major Charles HUGHES, Lieut. BOOTHBY, Co. K, and others. E. Henry RYDER, Color-bearer, escaped with the colors by secreting himself in the bushes until nightfall, when he started on foot for Alexandria. Company F, of this regiment, is at Alexandria, guarding commissary stores. Lieut. AMMERMAN, of Co. G, 27th, Little Shaker, of Great Bend, Penn., bookman on the case, was shot and killed by guerrillas in the attack upon Bristow Station; the telegraph operator at Manassas Junction was wounded; John HOUGHTON, citizen and cook, was murdered at the same place. Wounded at Bull Run yesterday—James E. TEACHMAN, Co. G, 2d New-Jersey; James T. DEVIS, Co. I, 12th Ohio; Wm. TOWNLEY, Co. I, 1st New-Jersey; George CLARKSON, Co. I, 1st New-Jersey; John MALBURN, Co. G, 55th Pennsylvania. Peter SHOCK, Co. F, 12th Ohio, died in temporary hospital near Bull Run Creek.

I must bring this letter to a close; a battery is just now opened; perhaps the work of to-morrow may be commenced to-day.

NEWSPAPER ACCOUNTS.

From the Correspondence of the Philadelphia Bulletin.

On Monday morning intelligence was received at headquarters that the divisions of HILL and LONGSTREET intended to appear on our right in force and cut off our supply trains. To prevent this consummation, the division of Gen. RENO was dispatched by Gen. POPE to Fairfax Court-house. It was also deemed prudent to commence the evacuation of Centreville, to move our base of operations, inasmuch as Gens. HILL and LONGSTREET were known to be in force some distance toward Washington from the battle-field of Saturday, and as a reconnoissance to the front had revealed an extensive movement in the same direction by the enemy.

The army of Virginia commenced retiring toward Fairfax Court-house on Monday at 9 o'clock, RENO'S division leading the march and McDOWELL'S corps following.

As RENO'S division was pursuing its line of march, and when within one mile and a half of Fairfax Court-house, a heavy volley from a force of rebels came pouring in upon them from the woods to the right of the road. This occurred at 4 P. M. The rebel force was a detachment from Gen. HILL'S division, and was commanded by Gen. STUART.

The volley was almost entirely received by Gen. STEVENS' brigade, composed of the Twenty-eighth Massachusetts, Eighth Michigan, Fifteenth Pennsylvania, One Hundredth Pennsylvania, and Forty-sixth New-York.

RENO and STEVENS immediately formed their commands in line of battle to repel the attack of the enemy, now concealed in the thick shrubbery of the woods. The heavy rods up and down, with their gallantry, rallying his men, was unintimidated by repeated volleys from unseen enemy.

Unable to cope with them in the position they then held, Gen. STEVENS ordered his men to fix bayonets and charge them out through the woods. This order was gallantly responded to by his men, who pressed the enemy and drove them before them with great slaughter. While thus charging them, Gen. STEVENS was hit with a Minié ball and instantly killed, but not until the enemy had been routed. Capt. STEVENS, the son of the General, was also wounded in the hand. KEARNEY'S batteries now opened on the rebel forces, causing a havoc among the rebel ranks. Skirmishing was kept up for about three hours, when the enemy retreated, and the train passed on unmolested.

Your correspondent passed over the battle-ground at 10 o'clock on Monday evening. The enemy's loss was heavy. Their dead lay in furrows where the fire of our first Sunday brigade went whistling among them, and I thought the penalty for this raid was amply severe.

Mr. BURNAM offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the imperative duty of those having command of our military forces to take the most speedy measures to drive the invading rebels from the limits of the State, and that any policy looking to the abandonment of the interior of the State and of removing our forces to the line of the Ohio River is unwise and impolitic.

The Mayor's proclamation is being nobly responded to.

Citizens are enrolling themselves in the Wards, and Home Guard companies are ready for service.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE SOUTHWEST, IN THE FIELD, FORT SCOTT, Kansas, Aug. 26.

The greatest activity prevails here in getting the army ready for an immediate advance towards Arkansas. Gen. BLUNT, commanding the forces here, has received information that all the troops in the Department of Kansas, and all those in Southeast Missouri, including all the recent levy of militia, will be concentrated at such point as he shall designate. This portion of the army is finely equipped, and contains four complete batteries of eight guns each. The troops have been brigaded, and the different Commanders ordered to move their commands to a suitable place east and south of Fort Scott, where a good supply of foraging, grass, fuel, and good healthy water, can be obtained.

Information has just been received here, confirming the report that the rebels are concentrating in large numbers at Cross Hollow, Ark., with the intention of marching north, proposing to take Fort Scott, then Fort Leavenworth.

PIKE had made a speech to his men, saying he intended to be quartered in Fort Leavenworth before snow fell. There is no mistaking that such is the idea held out to the rebel force now concentrating at Cross Hollow, and the recent expedition, under COCHRANE and COFFEE, to Lone Jack, was for the purpose of escorting the new levies down to Arkansas. Hundreds of men followed them, and they had the two pieces of the Indiana Battery, which they captured at Lone Jack, but they were mostly without arms.

Day before yesterday, QUESNELL and HAYS' bands came upon the companies of the Second Kansas, and three companies of the Sixth Kansas near Lamar. Major CAMPBELL and Capt. GAZZO, of the Sixth, attacked them with 600 of their men, and had a severe fight. Two men were killed, and 21 wounded. Lieut.-Col. BARNES, commanding the Second Kansas, marched upon the opposite side of the stream out of danger. Wounded men say that the rebels had about 700, and if BARNES had helped, they would have whipped them. Col. CLOUD left his force the day before to report at this place. All say that had he been there QUESNELL and HAYS would have been taken.

STONEWALL JACKSON'S MOVEMENTS

The Report of His Marching Upon Baltimore, and How it Originated.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

Stonewall JACKSON is on his way to Baltimore, via Leesburgh, with 40,000 men. He intends crossing near Edwards' Ferry.

PHILADELPHIA, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

A previous dispatch mentioned that Stonewall JACKSON was marching on Baltimore, via Leesburgh. The following is the report as published in the Inquirer, of this city:

"We have a report that JACKSON is on his way to Baltimore, via Leesburgh, with 40,000 men, and that he intends crossing at or near Edwards' Ferry."

NOTE.—This story, we are informed, originated in the fact of a few planks having been loosened on the Chain Bridge—which, be it known, is not a chain bridge, but a wooden one. Another source of the rumor may be the following, which is going the rounds:

"An escaped Union Surgeon, late a prisoner, states that he overheard a conversation, a few days since, between the rebel Gens. STUART and WILCOX, from which he inferred that a strong force of the enemy diverged from the main body between Gordonsville and Thoroughfare, and are now marching up the Valley for Harper's Ferry."

THE LATEST NEWS FROM OUR ARMY.

Dispatches to the Philadelphia Enquirer state that Falls Church has been evacuated by our troops.

The wounded who were in the hospitals at Falls Church have arrived in Washington.

The railroad bridge over Bull Run has again been destroyed by the rebels.

The latest from Maj.-Gen. POPE's army headquarters says that his whole column was falling back toward Washington.

WAR MATTERS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

HARRISBURGH, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

An erroneous report has been in circulation here that Gov. CURTIN had telegraphed to the Secretary of War that he insisted on Pennsylvania troops being placed under Major-Gen. MCCLELLAN.

The intelligence from Washington that the army is falling back to the fortifications, has given rise to the expression of opinions regarding the propriety of sending troops away, when they may be required for the defence of the State. A large number have already gone, and more are preparing to go.

MORE REGIMENTS EN ROUTE.

BOSTON, Tuesday, Sept. 2.

The Twentieth Maine Regiment, Col. ALLEN, and the Thirty-sixth Massachusetts, Col. BOWMAN, embarked this afternoon, by steamer Merrimac, for the seat of war.

FROM ALBANY.

ALBANY, N. Y., Tuesday, Sept. 2.

From all accounts recruiting has been very active throughout the State for the past few days. The State will probably be ready for the draft about the 10th. Gen. BURNSIDE was in town to-day on the invitation of the Governor. It is supposed his business was connected with the draft.

GEN. CORCORAN IN ALBANY.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

Gen. CORCORAN, accompanied by Alderman DAYTON, is at Congress Hall.

The General comes here to forward the raising of a regiment.

Political Matters in New-Jersey, &c.

TRENTON, N. J., Wednesday, Sept. 3.

The Democratic State Convention, for the nomination of a candidate for Governor, meets in this city to-morrow.

Delegates are arriving from different parts of the State, and considerable canvassing is now going on.

The funeral of the late Gen. TALIZIN will take place on Friday, at 11 o'clock, from his late residence of Clinton, Hunterdon County.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

GEN. McCLELLAN'S NEW COMMAND.

The Arrangements for the Care of the Wounded.

RETURN OF UNION PRISONERS.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

GEN. M'CLELLAN'S NEW COMMAND.

The following is the correct form in which the order with reference to Gen. McCLELLAN has been issued:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, Sept. 2, 1862.

GENERAL ORDER No. 122.

By direction of the President, Major-General McCLELLAN will have command of the fortifications of Washington and of all the troops for the defence of the City of Washington, and of the troops in the field. By command of Maj.-Gen. HALLECK.

E. D. TOWNSEND, Assistant Adjutant-General.

The reappointment of Gen. McCLELLAN is primarily due to the wishes of the army itself. A thoroughly disciplined Major-General who has been opposed to Gen. McCLELLAN'S strategy, visited to-night the tents, and compelled him to admit that the soldiers demand Gen. McCLELLAN for their leader. Gen. McCLELLAN has spent the whole day in the field, returning late this evening, personally superintending the disposition of the forces detailed for the defense of the city.

GROUNDLESS RUMORS.

Reports have reached here, from time to time, of certain regiments having been nearly annihilated, when, after the lapse of a few days, the losses proved groundless, the reappearance of these regiments being the best refutation of the exaggerations.

Washington is comparatively quiet, the excitement of the past two days having subsided. Such disposition has been made of the troops within the last twenty-four hours as to restore confidence.

THE REMENT BATTLES.

A General Officer, who was in all recent engagements, states that we could not have had over thirty thousand men actually engaged, and gives it as his opinion that the enemy's force was about eighty thousand. Our losses he estimates at about ten thousand.

RETURNED PRISONERS.

Over 1,100 soldiers, captured by rebels in late battles and discharged on parole, arrived in Georgetown this evening.

DISPOSITION OF THE REBEL FORCES.

They report that Gen. LEE's headquarters on Tuesday morning was three miles beyond Bull Run; they saw but few rebel camps between Bull Run and Washington. A Georgia regiment, and detachments rebel cavalry, and STUART himself, were stationed at Fairfax Court-house. Gen. LEE was still there at Fairfax this morning; but, after a short stay, returned to his headquarters beyond Centreville. There was evidence in burying our dead, which the rebels had stripped of all their clothing, excepting their shirts. They estimate the number of our killed on Saturday at four hundred.

REBEL PRISONERS.

Some rebel prisoners captured in the fight of Monday, were brought into Alexandria to-day. They belonged principally to South Carolina, Georgia and Louisiana regiments, and had eaten scarcely anything for three days previous to their capture.

FEELING IN WASHINGTON.

The general feeling here to-night is much more cheerful than last night. The most serious evil we have to encounter is the war of factions which rages in our midst, preventing harmony of counsel and unity of action, and paralyzes the Government. The power of the nation is unbroken. The army is still strong. The enemy is weaker with each successive effort.

ARREST OF DELINQUENT OFFICERS.

A large number of officers have been arrested here in the streets and hotels, by Gen. HALLECK'S orders, for being absent from their regiments without leave, and the names of more than a score will be stricken from the rolls of the army.

GEN. HEINTZELMAN.

Gen. HEINTZELMAN was in the City to-day, actively engaged in official duties. By his dress he could not be distinguished from a common soldier. Like all military men, he is in favor of filling up the old regiments instead of organizing new ones.

SEVENTEEN HUNDRED MILITIA CLERKS.

Department clerks have been organized to a militia to the number of seventeen hundred, and will be armed and commence drilling to-morrow. The men from Public works will be added to make a regiment of eighteen hundred.

CONGRESSIONAL NEWS.

Senator FESSENDEN arrived this morning and applied to Gen. HALLECK for a flag of truce to recover the body of his son, killed in the late fight and buried near Centreville. The request has not yet been granted.

A dispatch from Wheeling, to Gov. PRICE, yesterday, states that no fears are entertained of a raid there.

THE DRAFTED TROOPS.

The Secretary of War has decided to organize the drafted troops in District regiments, instead of using them to fill up the old ones.

APPORTIONMENT UNDER THE TAX LAW.

The following additional apportionments have been made under the direct tax and excise law for the State of Maryland: Third District, Prince G. HAMMERSLY, AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

Review of the National Guard—The Imperial Guard—A Fête to be Passed with the Guard Company—Tone of the Paris Press—The Drama, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Tuesday, Aug. 19, 1862.

The Emperor passed in review this week, the still left with them the Mobilisation of the Paris, the entire National Guard of Paris—that is to say, the entire Guard, with the exception of [illegible] in which the Republican element is so large a majority that the Government has more deemed it prudent to place guns at their disposition. The National Guard, as you know, is the militia of the country, an armed body of citizens which stands between the Government and the people—to aid the Government when the people are wrong, or to aid the people when the Government is wrong—a body which holds the balance of power, which creates or puts down revolution, and which boasts that it is the conservator of the rights of the people as well as of those of the Government. It is composed of all citizens, without regard to rank, under the age of forty-five, but so many protests for exemption are obtained, that in fact the body is composed almost exclusively of the shop-keepers—the petite bourgeoisie. Thus the nobility and bourgeoisie manage to a great part to avoid duty in the militia, while from the fact that each man must furnish his own outfit, an immense number of poor men, not otherwise exempt, are excluded. All workmen of the class here called ouvriers are excluded, as well as all foreigners. Thus, composed of trade-people in the main, the National Guard is supposed to take a great interest in preventing revolution, but at the same time it remains independent, and so far as regards the present dynasty, three-fourths of the Guard are probably unfriendly in principle. So that many conjectures find circulation as to the motive of calling out at this particular time the entire Guard, and among others, I have heard it said that the Emperor wished to hear some expression on the subject of Italy from this important element of his Empire. If this were indeed his wish, he was gratified, for in certain hamlines of the Nationals, the cry of Vive l' Italie was freely uttered.

The number of the National Guard on parade at this review was about 30,000, of the Imperial Guard 20,000, and of the garrison of Paris, (the line,) 20,000. No foreigners of distinction were present, and the Emperor was accompanied by his son, by the Prince NAPOLEON, and by the Marshals and other officers of distinction in high command.

The grand annual fête passed off this year with the usual illuminations and public amusements for the people. The crowd was unusually large, and no accident occurred to mar the pleasures of the day. The Emperor and Empress appeared in the crowd in the afternoon entirely unguarded, and received the ovations of the people. Many Italian flags were displayed from the windows of houses throughout the city by French people, while all the other foreign flags were displayed by the people of the nation to which the flags belonged. Many American flags were thus displayed by Americans for the moment living at Paris, while the Constitutionnel professes to have seen in the Faubourg St. Honoré the "flag of its love," the emblem of rebellion, which is not impossible, as the number of secession families now here is considerable.

Speaking of flags reminds me of a complaint against the Cunard Company on the subject of flags, which I heard the other day from an American gentleman, a diplomat who had just arrived from New-York in one of the steamers of that Company. At Queenstown, it appears, the American flag, which is usually run up at the fore in compliment to the American mail which the line carries, was observed not to be the same as that used in coming out of the port of New-York. The one used at New-York had thirty-four stars; the one used on the British coast had but twenty-three—thus making an allowance for the eleven secded stars of the Southern Confederacy. Not daring to suppose that a Company which had a mail contract with the American Government would thus voluntarily insult that Government, or that a line supported mainly by the trade and travel of New-York and Boston, would pay so little respect to the people of those cities as to thus flaunt their sympathy with Secession in their faces, the gentleman in question asked the Captain or some one in authority, if the twenty-three stars of the flag was not a mistake, and to his surprise and indignation, was informed that it was not. And when he remonstrated, he was informed that the Company reserved to themselves the right of decorating their own ships in whatever way they pleased, which, after all, is indeed their right, but which, nevertheless ought to be recollected by Congress the next time an American Company ask for a Transatlantic mail contract.

The secession journals for a few days past say little about the subject of mediation or intervention. But they amuse themselves with criticisms on Mr. SEWARD's high-toned circular to the English Cabinet, and on the army which is half at home on furlough in a time of danger to the other half.

The Siècle, however, which is a warm friend to the North, in trying to find a new solution to the American question, makes a singular blunder, for blunder it certainly is, in view of the fact that this paper has constantly opposed the secession papers in their efforts to induce the Government to interfere. The Siècle thinks that if the French Government should say to the Government of the United States: "If you don't open your ports for the exportation of cotton we will recognize the South;" that the Government of the United States would yield the point. The Siècle concludes that there are precedents of a Government thus opening its ports to a certain kind of trade, for either to relieve the distress in neutral States, and thinks that under proper restrictions the cotton trade might thus be permitted. The secession papers pounce upon this proposition with delight, and claim the Siècle as a convert to their doctrine of intervention. Hunt again, oh friend Siècle! in the hope that you will be more fortunate next time.

A piece has just been written for the Palais Royal Theatre, by M. HENRY ROCHEFORT and M. WOLFF, which they entitled "Les Affaires du Sud," (the Affairs of the South,) and which the Committee of Censure refused to authorise on account of the title, which, as you will perceive, is political. The authors then changed the title, and the piece will be represented under the name of "Un Homme du Sud," (A Man of the South.)

When the last Mexican mail arrived at Saint Nazaire, by French steamer from Vera Cruz, the Government broke open and examined all letters addressed to the journals or to influential persons, before distributing the mail. So much surveillance is in fact exercised over all published matter relating to Mexican affairs, that the public are founded in the belief that the Government is playing a game in that country which would not well bear too close inspection.

The speech of the Emperor to the Spanish Ambassador has, as I predicted, awakened a storm in Spain that will not soon be allayed. And yet the Government papers had the effrontery to publish a dispatch from Madrid, the day after the delivery of the speech, which declared that His Majesty's speech had produced a favorable effect at Madrid! The dispatch said more probably disagreeable.

The French are sending out machinery and material for building a railroad from Vera Cruz to Orizaba.

Lately, at a diplomatic dinner, at the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Mr. BENSON, the black President of Liberia, sat on M. THOUVENEL's right, and the copper-colored Japanese Ambassador on his left. At a subsequent dinner these two gentlemen were placed at the sides of the lady of the Prussian Minister.

The Viceroy of Egypt, who has returned to Paris from London, (where, it is said, he bought nearly half the exhibition,) is lying dangerously ill at a house on the Avenue de St. Cloud, with a fever arising from fistulas. He is attended by Drs. BATHEY and JOBERT DE LAMBALLE—a physician and a surgeon of the Emperor.

I have just heard that Chili has offered to mediate between France and Mexico, and that the Government of France offered to accept the mediation, if renewed after the French army had arrived at the capital. There is reason to doubt the authenticity of this report.

The Minister of Marine, Count CHAMPELOUP LOUBAT, was married yesterday, at the chapel of the ministry, in the palace of the Luxembourg, to Mlle. PILIE, of New-Orleans. MALAKOFF.

SOUTH AMERICA.

The Invasion of Ecuador—Latest from Peru, Chili and Bolivia, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Monday, Aug. 25, 1862.

The regular British Mail steamship Peru arrived at Panama from South American ports on the evening of the 22d. She brought the usual amount of freight and passengers, and $500,000 in specie for England. The dates from Valparaiso and Santiago de Chili are to the 2d, and from Callao and Lima to the 16th August. The only news of interest is from Ecuador.

ECUADOR.

I wrote you, a month since, that the troops of Gen. ARBOLEDA, the leader of the reactionary party in the State of Cauca, in the new Republic of the United States of Colombia, formerly known as New-Granada, had entered on the territory of Ecuador in pursuit of some Mosqueristas, who had sought refuge over the frontier at Pasto, and when ordered off, had killed or badly wounded an Ecuadorian officer. For this act, you already know, the President of Ecuador, Señor GARCIA MORENO, had demanded the dismission of the Colonel who commanded ARBOLEDA's troops, and also an indemnity of $100,000. This having been refused, the Province of Pasto was invaded by MORENO, it is said by 2,000 men, but it could scarcely have been by so many. A private letter from Guayaquil says that "ARBOLEDA, who was at Popayan, the capital of the State of Cauca, having heard of this invasion, marched immediately into Pasto, and on the 30th of July, in the vicinity of Tulcan, found himself in front of the Ecuatorian force. On the 31st, at 10 in the morning, he commenced to manœuvre, and outflanking the Ecuatorians, made a bayonet charge upon them with a part of his force in solid columns, and was received by a shower of balls from six pieces of cannon. At this moment Gen. ZARAMA, whose division had succeeded in flanking the Ecuatorians, advanced upon them, the two parties completely encircling them. President MORENO, 'who performed prodigies of valor,' was taken prisoner, as also did the Commandant General and Secretary of War, Señor DANIEL SALVADOR. Thirteen hundred prisoners also fell into the hands of ARBOLEDA, including nearly all the Ecuatorian officers. Seventeen hundred muskets and seven pieces of cannon also fell into ARBOLEDA's hands."

But the sequel of the story is so droll, that were it not vouched for by reliable men, would be considered an old "Mother Goose" jumble. It is this: After MORENO was defeated and made prisoner, he suddenly "made it up" with ARBOLEDA, and made a treaty, offensive and defensive, with him. MORENO recognizes ARBOLEDA as President of Colombia or New-Granada, and CANAL as Vice-President. He agrees to furnish them with 1,000 men, 4,000 uniforms, 2,000 muskets, and $600,000 in cash, with which to carry on the war in Cauca against MOSQUERA. The Mosquera Minister has been dismissed from Quito, and MORENO also dismissed all the Mosqueristas residing at the same Capital. It is said GARCIA MORENO made the treaty with ARBOLEDA in consequence of some disclosures contained in a correspondence between Provisional President MOSQUERA and President CASTILLA, of Peru, found in the baggage of Señor QUIJANO, who was MOSQUERA's special Commissioner to Quito. This in some degree confirms the intelligence we have of the defeat of ARBOLEDA by MOSQUERA's principal commander in Cauca, Leria. ARBOLEDA must have been on his retreat into Pasto when he met MORENO.

Ecuador was the first of the South American States to recognise MOSQUERA's Government, and the first to send a Minister to him at Bogota. Gen. FLOREZ, who is the real head of the Ecuatorian Government, has always been understood as being a firm friend of MOSQUERA, and it is said has given him considerable aid in his endeavors to regain possession of Cauca. There may have been a secret plan between Presidents CASTILLA and MOSQUERA to divide Ecuador between them, or something of the sort, which has brought about the present complication.

The people of Ecuador are said to be very much dissatisfied with this treaty, and a revolution may be the consequence.

PERU AND BOLIVIA.

Congress is in session, and the President is giving balls and banquets to Congressmen, Foreign Ministers, &c.

There is not a word of news of interest from either Peru or Bolivia.

The treasure shipped at Callao for Europe, in the last seven months, from January to July inclusively, amounts to two millions, four hundred and ten thousand, sixty-eight dollars. ($2,410,068.)

The saltpetre shipped at Iquique, in June and July, was eight hundred and eighty thousand, four hundred and seventy-nine quintals. (880,479 cwgs)

CHILI.

The Chilenos seem to be generally satisfied with their new Ministers, and everything is going on quietly and smoothly again. There is still little worth transcribing, however, from this quarter.

Projects are before the Government for rebuilding, but on a larger scale, the city destroyed by the earthquake at Valparaiso.

The Council of State has agreed to allow $4,000 a year to a learned member of the bar, to whom the Government will commit the framing of a code of civil procedure.

The mining interests of Chili are suffering severely from the low price of copper in Europe. The large mines have materially reduced their operations in consequence.

THE STATE OF PANAMA.

Defeat and Death of Gen. Guardia—Civil War—Important from Cauca—Rumors from Bogota, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Monday, Aug. 25, 1862.

News reached here on Saturday from the interior of the State that the forces of the two parties of the Constitutional Governor, GUARDIA, and of the Provisional Government, DIAZ, had had an engagement, resulting in the retreat of the Guardia party, and the death of their leader or chief. The official account, published at Panama, says: "Gov. GUARDIA and Ex-Gov. FRANCISCO FERRERA advanced from the Santa Maria River to River Chiru, which latter river runs past Nata, with 300 men to attack the Panama troops, who numbered 500 men. The battle commenced at midday and lasted till dark, when the Guardia troops retreated, with loss of five killed, leaving behind eight prisoners, seven horses and twelve muskets. Among the killed was GUARDIA. Young CUCALON was also killed, and THOMAS HERRERA severely wounded. The loss on the Panama side is two killed and two wounded."

We have reports in Panama that the Mosquera authorities are about to enforce some of the decrees of their chief in Panama, such as the Mortmain Law and that relating to the circulation of paper money. No doubt the first decree will be enforced, but I do not think any endeavor will be made to force paper money upon the people. The foreign merchants, who do nearly all the business, will close their shops rather than take it.

The regular British mail steamship from Aspinwall to St. Thomas and Southampton left on the 24th with two millions in specie, brought to Panama by H. B. M. war ship Cameleon, from the coast of Mexico from California, and from Chili and Peru. The British mail steamship from Europe brought last week £250,000 sterling, it being portion of the Peruvian loan of $6,000,000, lately contracted in Europe.

The British 17-gun steamer Cameleon and the United States frigate Saranac are at Panama. The United States brig Perry is at Aspinwall. No other foreign war ships at the latter port.

Dr. MACKIE, of the State Department, Washington, arrived here on the last steamer from New-York, and went to Bolivia from Panama on the 24th. He takes a treaty between the United States and Bolivia.

The brig Susan Chase had arrived at San Juan del Norte, from Aspinwall, with thirty-three exiles, said to have been sent there by the Mosquera Government. Among the party were a bishop and sixteen priests. They intended taking passage in the English steamer from here for Havana, but the passage money being more than they expected, concluded to change their course and go overland to Guatemala.

Thus, we have inaugurated a civil war in this State, growing out of the most trifling causes, and which might have been averted had the parties made the slightest effort to that end. It is not even a war, or was not, when it commenced, between political enemies or between men of a different political creed. For both the Diaz and Guardia men professed to be friends of the Mosquera Government, and split on the stupid question of whether they should wait till the National Convention should meet in Cartagena, for the action of that body in regard to the political future of Panama, or whether Mosquera's Government, which had already been acknowledged, would put its machinery in motion among us at once. It was greatly to be hoped that there might be an error in the report of GUARDIA's death, but it appears to be fully confirmed. He was a mild, amiable gentleman, with a large and elegant family about him, and I believe was acknowledged by all to have been a conscientious man, politically and morally.

We have important news from our neighboring State of Cauca. Gen. ARBOLEDA, chief of the reactionary army in Cauca, was defeated by Gen. LOPEZ, Chief in command of the Mosquera forces, at Totero, six leagues from Popayan, the Capital of Cauca, and compelled to retreat to Pasto on the Ecuadorian frontier, with his whole force, including CANAL and Gov. VELEZ, of Antioquia. Cauca is in new in complete possession of MOSQUERA, and were it not for the new complication of Ecuador in the matter, an account of which may be found under its proper head, the war in New-Granada would be substantially ended.

CENTRAL AMERICA.

Quiet in Honduras and Guatemala—Scarcity of Food in Nicaragua—The Central American on the French Invasion of Mexico—Opposition to the Immigration of Negroes, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Monday, Aug. 25, 1862.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamship Guatemala, Capt. J. W. DOW, arrived at Panama from Central American ports on the 20th instant. She brought a small cargo, consisting of 810 cerrons cochineal, a few hides and 50 bales of deerskins; also passengers and a small amount of specie. Her dates from Guatemala are to the 11th; Salvador to the 13th; Nicaragua to the 15th, and Costa Rica to the 17th of August.

HONDURAS AND GUATEMALA.

President CASTILLANOS continues to be popular among the people of Honduras, and perfect quiet prevails over the country. Honduras, like all the Central American States, is suffering severely on account of the high price of articles of prime necessity for the poor.

Although there are many persons in Guatemala who would fain disturb the public peace, by scattering false reports to excite the people to insurrection and the Government has to watch them very closely, no apprehensions of revolution are entertained by President CARRERA.

The crop of cochineal has been about 6,000 cerrons, of which 5,400 cerrons have been exported. Next year, on account of the low price in Europe, the crop will be considerably less.

Business is very dull in Guatemala, and many merchants are failing.

SALVADOR AND NICARAGUA.

President BARRIOS has finished his tour over the Republic. He was everywhere received with popular demonstrations of favor. The great question of the opposition of the Catholic clergy to the Government, which so nearly caused a revolution, and would have caused it had the priests been able to inveigle the people into their support, will be settled amicably, Pope Pius having directed the priests to take the oath to obey the laws required from them by President BARRIOS.

Salvador has made a treaty of peace, amity and commerce, and has been signed between Salvador and Honduras.

All through Nicaragua, and especially in the mining district of Chontales, the people continue to suffer severely, on account of the scarcity of food.

The mining for gold in the Chontales district promises well to those who have carried good machines there from the United States and Europe. A letter-writer in Nicaragua, for the Panama Bulletin, makes a blackguard attack, probably incited by jealousy, upon Capt. FRASER, of New-York, who lately took gold machinery to the Chontales mines.

A letter-writer from Greytown says:

"One of the Transit Company's brigs arrived here yesterday from New-York, with a large cargo, consisting of lumber, wagons, provisions, &c. Five other vessels are daily expected with like freights. A new steamer, to run on the lake, will arrive here from New-York about the 20th of this month."

The President of Nicaragua has addressed a letter to the President of Guatemala regarding the invasion of Mexico, in which he expresses fears for the safety of Central America, and suggests intervention on behalf of the latter States. The President of Guatemala, who seems to sympathize with the Juarez Government of Mexico, replied, that he thought the observers should wait with satisfaction upon the establishment in that country of a reliable and respectable authority. He says the state of anarchy into which Mexico has unfortunately fallen for years past, and which has recently become intolerable, has provoked the intervention of European Powers for the purpose of redressing wrongs committed, and winds up by stating, that the present tranquil state of Central America, and the good understanding with European Powers, leads him to have no fear of such a collision as has occurred in Mexico, and advises, therefore, that they should remain peacefully quiet and not trouble themselves about their neighbor.

The Boston Office of Mosquera continues to circulate the proposed colonization from the United States of Central America, by freed negro slaves. It says: "We look upon such a project with horror, and we can never consent to its consummation, because it is an attempt, not only to disconnect us from our soil, but is also directed against the existence of our race, and we do not believe that the thought has entered any one's head that such an inundation of negroes would bring any good to Central America, but on the contrary, the very worst imaginable evils."

The same paper says the "New-York and Nicaragua Company," which advertised in the New-York Tribune to make certain conditions to emigrants to Nicaragua, is a humbug.

Caterpillars have destroyed what little cotton and indigo that has been planted in Nicaragua this year. There is nothing worth noting from Costa Rica.

AN INTERESTING NARRATIVE.

STATEMENT OF COL. ADOLPHUS ADLER.

His Ten Months' Imprisonment in Richmond—His Escape from Castle Godwin and Journey to the Union Lines—Immense Force of the Rebels—They are Determined to Push Northward—Advice at Richmond.

Col. ADOLPHUS H. ADLER, recently of the rebel army, whose escape from Castle Godwin, Richmond, and during journey through the hostile part of Virginia to the Union lines near Winchester, was mentioned a few days ago in the Washington papers, has personally communicated the following interesting particulars relative to his former service, his captivity and his flight.

HIS ANTECEDENTS.

The Colonel is a native of Hungary, and a civil and military engineer by profession. At the outbreak of the Hungarian war for independence, he joined the patriot army under Gen. AUERSPERG, and served throughout that arduous struggle, receiving, at the battle of Saolkok, a very painful and dangerous wound. He was subsequently taken and imprisoned for several weeks by the Austrians, but managed to make his escape into Germany and France. In the Italian campaign of 1859, he gallantly served under GARIBALDI, and in the famous movement on Varese received another severe wound in the neck. After the triumphant close of that decisive campaign he came to the United States, and gradually made his way to the South. Being in Richmond when the secession insurrection began, he found himself so situated that no other alternative presented itself than to take service in the rebel army. An important position was assigned him, with the military grade of Colonel, in the brigade assigned to HENRY A. WISE, whom he accompanied to Western Virginia, acting as his Engineer-in-Chief. In that capacity he devised and constructed the celebrated fortifications at Tyler's Mountain, publicly pronounced by the able rebel Gen. LEE to be the finest in the United States. He commanded the Confederate force at the battle of Sherry's Creek, fought July 16, 1861, where he captured Col. WOODSON, Col. DE VITRIXES, of the Eleventh Ohio Volunteers, and other Union officers. Being all along dissatisfied with the rebel service, he, on the 5th of August in the same year resigned his commission at Lewisburgh and repaired to Richmond, where numerous offers of high position and emolument were made to him by the Confederate authorities. All these he steadfastly declined, and, of course, very speedily became a "suspicious character."

HIS IMPRISONMENT.

Finally he was arrested but left at liberty on his parole. When, in September, martial law was proclaimed, he was again seized and confined in the Henrico County Jail, from which he was finally removed to Castle Godwin, otherwise and more vulgarly known as McDANIEL'S Negro Jail. There, in a miserable room but eight feet in width, he was incarcerated until the 10th of August last, when he effected his escape. During his captivity he had, by the exercise of many cunning devices, managed to retain possession of a considerable amount of money, the total of his savings in Europe and America, and of a portion of this sum he made good use in regaining his liberty. From the rebels he received not one cent of pay for all the service he had rendered, and he awards them the justice to say that they, at least, did not, on the other hand, despoil him of his own, further than denying him the time to arrange and remove his baggage, which was, consequently, all lost.

HIS ESCAPE.

In the evening of the 9th of August he walked out of his prison, in disguise, passing no fewer than four sentries and a sergeant, ere he reached the street. He at once hastened to the house of a Union man of his acquaintance—and there are many in Richmond—and there remained hidden for two days, paying, however, some $60 for the privilege. Warned by his kind host that the Government detectives were on his track, he changed his hiding place in the night, and managed, by shifting his dwelling in the same way, repeatedly, to remain secretly in Richmond for eight days, without being discovered. Closely disguised, he went out at night and approached the fortifications and outworks of the town, which he considers formidable indeed, but by no means impregnable. He also hid himself in the vicinity of the railroads, and, for night after night, a train left every two hours, conveying troops to Gordonsville and the line of the Rappahannock. All the roads coming from the South are now connected at Richmond with those running North, so that trains of troops arriving from below can pass right through Northward, without detention. The account given by Col. ADLER, with circumstantial exactitude, conflicts with the underestimate generally made of the force of the rebel armies in Virginia. The Colonel, during these eight days of concealment, at great expense, employed a man whom he had long known and served, to watch Gen. WISE, the military commandant of the city, and to bring him exact intelligence. This information, aided by his own intimate knowledge of the rebel organization, plans, &c., enabled him to make out the following figures:

REBEL FORCES MARCHING NORTHWARD.

Under Gen. Joe Johnson	60,000 men
"Stonewall" Jackson	24,000 men
Longstreet's Corps	18,000 men
Gen. D. H. Hill	16,000 men
Gen. A. P. Hill	12,000 men
Gen. Ross, of Alabama	6,000 men
Gen. Craig, of South Carolina	12,000 men
Gen. Huger's Division	12,000 men
Independent corps from Georgia, South and North Carolina, Alabama, &c.	30,000 men
Infantry	243,000 men
Cavalry, including Gen. Stuart's command of 4,200 men	20,000 men
Total	263,000 men

Of artillery, the force is not specially mentioned, but 150 pieces were sent with "Stonewall" JACKSON alone, and the entire parks are not less in total than 400. The cavalry is accompanied by 10 and 24-pounders, and the most of entire amount of artillery consists of field-pieces, very many of them rifled and of the most modern pattern.

Gen. EWELL's Corps alone amounts to 26,000 men, apart from JACKSON's, but it is known to be a part of JACKSON's force, although Col. ADLER gives it its full value. He stated that 87 fine pieces of ordnance were left behind by Gen. MCCLELLAN on the Chickahominy, and all of them have been made available. The army, then, immediately in front of and on the flanks of Gen. POPE, extending from the line of Gordonsville toward Leesburgh, is fully 250,000 men. Col. ADLER elicited expressions of much surprise when he made the same statement to the highest military authorities at Washington; but he insist upon its truth, and says that any less calculation will entail most serious disaster. The rebels are making a determined push on Maryland, and their plans thus far have met with even more success than they anticipated.

THE COLONEL'S FLIGHT.

After eight days, spent in procuring them food, Col. ADLER, by bribing two negroes for $4 apiece, to hoist him over the wooden inclosure that surrounds the railway depot in Richmond, and to kept carefully closed at night, secreted himself in the cars, and managed to elude the vigilance of the guards until the train was fairly on its way to Lynchburgh. From Lynchburgh he got on as far as Charlottesville, and there boarded a freight train which stopped between and at along the road to allow him to alight. He at once struck across to Harrisonburgh, passing the Blue Ridge about—a journey that occupied him three days and two nights. On his way, he was compelled to shoot a bushwhacker, who, armed to the teeth, occupied the mountain road, and who, according to the rule adopted by the rangers of those now wild mountains toward strangers, would have killed him with a ball from his unerring rifle, on sight. He observed this formidable enemy before he was himself perceived, and holding himself to the wayside thickets, he brought his trusty five-shooter into play, and disposed of the obstacle that ceased in her his flight. At Mossanna Gap the mountains swarmed with these "bushwhackers," and one of them boasts that he alone has brought down seven or eight Union soldiers at different times. At Harrisonburgh the Colonel learned that the rebels had pickets at Newmarket, Mount Jackson, Woodstock and Newtown. He hired the best buggy in the town, and a negro to drive it, and rode as far as the vicinity of Newmarket, where he dismissed his attendant and vehicle, and made his way around the rebel pickets by taking a circuit through the woods. This plan he followed at each successive town and village, until, on the 25th, he reached the vicinity of Winchester, where a farmer, conveying a load of goodies to market, gave him conveyance to the outer line of Union pickets, when he surrendered himself and was at once hurried over to the officer in command. Exhibiting his papers, and making his statement as above given, he was furnished with a pass by Lieut.-Col. E. H. SWINEY, of the Thirty-second Regiment, Ohio Volunteers, Provost-Marshal of Winchester.

He arrived in Washington on the night of the 26th and at once reported to the Provost-Marshal. After a hearing, Gen. WADSWORTH placed him entirely at liberty. Since then, he has had repeated interviews with some of our leading military men, and has given them some of the important facts elsewhere detailed. Coming on to New-York, he meets Col. CORCORAN and others, with whom he shared captivity a year ago. He was imprisoned in the same jail with our Colts Lee, Woos and Cosloveez, Capt. BOWMAN, Mr. BEARD, and the officers who were held as hostages for the rebel privateersmen. He was, also, confined in the same room for some time with JOHN MINOR BOTTS, who, for the first night of his incarceration, slept on the bare floor. On the ensuing day, however, Botts had bedding and furniture brought from his own residence, and was afterward more comfortable.

TONE OF RICHMOND.

At the rebel capital, the utmost tone of confidence in the military success of the South prevailed. Washington, they think, will be captured, and the Border States be rallied to the Confederacy. The North is denounced as a despotism, wielded by imbecile civil and military hands, and, in fine, the most assured certainty has replaced the doubt, and even dread, that was felt there a few months ago. Still the price of merchandise was enormously high—as far as ordinary shirt, $25 for a pair of cloth pantaloons, and $20 for a pair of heavy boots, being quite usual prices. Masses of the Southern troops are ragged and even shoeless; some of them, too, are without regular rations, yet they are determined to fight, and look upon the Northern commanders as mere playthings in the hands of their leaders—JACKSON, LEE, EWELL, LONGSTREET, HILL, &c.

Col. ADLER proposes to remain some time in the Northern service, for which opportunities are now offered, and may subsequently rejoin his old commander, GARIBALDI, in the impending great European movement.

KENTUCKY.

Proceedings at Frankfort—Mr. Wolfe's Unguarded and Unwise Report—Col. Whiteaker's Stand—Postponement of Executions Against United States Soldiers—Bull Runners to be Arrested and Imprisoned, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

LOUISVILLE, Friday, Aug. 29, 1862.

Mr. WOLFE's preamble and resolution, in relation to the President's appeal to the Border Slave States, are considered by many as uncalled for, unnecessary, idle, sentimentally impudent, indiscreet, equivocal, and not worth the action or notice of the Legislature. I am surprised at this move of Mr. WOLFE.

The Senate, 19 to 7, rejected the Judiciary Committee's adverse report to the House bill, providing that all connected with educational institutions shall take the oath; and then passed it. As a condition precedent to entering upon the discharge of their official duties, they are hereby required to swear that they will support the Constitution of the United States and of this State, and be true and faithful to the Commonwealth, so long as citizens thereof; that they recognize the binding obligation of the Constitution of the United States, and the duty of every citizen to submit thereto, as the supreme law of the land; that they will not give aid to the so-called Provisional Government of Kentucky, either directly or indirectly, so long as they remain citizens of or reside in Kentucky, and that they take the oath without any mental reservation. Any violating it punished for perjury, and any teaching without taking it fined $25 to $200. The speeches of Senators WHITAKER, STARK and DUNN, sensibly influenced the Senate to pass this bill.

Col. WHITAKER said he had periled his life for the Union, and upon the Legislature's adjournment expected to do it again, but did not want to leave behind him those who taught treason and debauched the youthful mind. "Conciliation is an idle dream; there must be coercion,—the strong arm alone can put down this insurrection. The army of the Ohio under Gens. BUELL and GRANT, have tried conciliation, but we are no nearer peace. We must crush this rebellion and the spirit which generated it."

The House, 51 to 31, despite the late Governor's objections, again passed the bill requiring ministers to take and file an oath of allegiance before solemnizing marriage.

The House, 79 to 1, passed the Senate bill dispensing with the Military Board, and transferring to Gov. ROBINSON all the powers heretofore delegated to the Board to borrow money. The House, 64 to 16, passed Judge DUREWEDDE's bill to relax at the Governor's discretion, 10,000 men as a State and police guard, under Executive orders; with Mr. TAYLOR's amendment, authorizing the Governor, if in his opinion the public safety demand it, to seize and press into service such horses, mules, wagons, arms, munitions, provisions and forage as he may deem requisite, taking care that the same be valued and receipted for. Both branches passed an act to authorize the Governor to appoint agents to receive money from soldiers for transmission to their families, and an act authorizing the City of Lexington to pay a bounty of $50 to every soldier who may enlist in the United States service for three years or the war, and to levy a tax to pay the same. The Senate, 15 to 7, passed Col. WHITAKER's bill providing that, with the executive consent, all executions against United States soldiers on bonds executed between the 1st of March, 1862, and the first Monday in January, 1864, shall be made returnable to the first Monday in March, 1864. Gen. FINZER's bill to organize the "Union Gun Artillery Corps of Kentucky," passed the House, 63 to 19. Drs. R. C. HAWES, J. B. FLINT and JNO. HERRIN are confirmed members of the Medical Commission, to be located in Louisville.

The Legislature adjourns from Sept. 1 until the second Thursday in January, 1863.

Gen. NELSON praises Col. MARCANTE and his hundred steadfast followers, and Lieut.-Col. CAMPBELL and his Tennessee battalion, for their gallant attack of the enemy on Big Hill, in Rockcastle County, and orders Provost Marshals to arrest and imprison any of Col. MARCANTE's regiment, whoever or men, who, at the first cannon shot, turned tail and fled like a pack of cowards, and dispersed over a half dozen counties. Gen. E. W. JONES reports that the conduct of his officers and men, in his late attack of Jeff. MORGAN at Gallatin, "was, as a general thing, shameful in the lowest degree."

Gen. BOYLE instructs Provost-Marshal, Gen. DUNN, to punish any Provost-Marshal guilty of exacting or receiving fees, and to discountenance "indiscriminate arrests and interferences with peaceable citizens, Home Guards, and all other citizens, with arrest and put down guerrilla bands and bands formed to join the rebels in arms against the Government of the United States, and invading the State of Kentucky.

PONTIAC.

A Plea for the Lost Children.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In looking over a copy of your journal, (Aug. 16, 1862,) my attention was attracted to an article copied from the Courier des Etats Unis, concerning the "Enfans Perdus," (the late name of our Battalion,) which article states that the regiment is in a demoralized condition, owing to the arrest and absence of its Lieut.-Col. CORCORAN, and also mentions that the causes which have operated to this result, are supposed to be the same as brought about the ruin and disbandment of the D'Epinueil Zouaves. It is also hoped that the "Rebels Prefer" be taken to heart before the organization dissolves. Either more officers should be appointed who will keep the men together, or a demoralization endeared with, say, the gallant Fifty-fifth.

Mr. Editor, in justice to the members of the regiment and myself, I will give you the true facts in the case, which, I think, will convince the readers of your journal that the article in question is not the truth. In the first place, the regiment is by no means in a state of demoralization; on the contrary, the battalion is at present in a good state of discipline. The regiment is compared to the D'Epinueil Zouaves, when it is a well-known fact, that the D'Epinueil Zouaves were dishonored, because the Government (as was supposed) had too many regiments in the service (many other regiments having been disbanded at the same time). I cannot see the similarity in reference to the suggestion that our regiment be taken in hand, before the organization dissolves. I will state that the battalion is in good hands, and there is not the slightest prospect of its being dissolved, or any mode of consolidation. You suggest that new officers shall be appointed, who will keep the men together. In reply to this suggestion, I will state that we suffer through a want of officers, they being twelve or more vacancies for line officers. When these vacancies are filled, our battalion will be ready for active service, when we will give a good account of ourselves; no further call is needed to keep the men together, as they are happy and contented, and have every reason to believe that they can place all candidates for their officers.

I should not trouble you with this communication, but for the pain the remarks in said article will cause to friends and relatives of the members of our battalion. The regiment is named by the French journals, because Lieut.-Col. CORCORAN is under arrest. He is there by order of the Government, for an unfounded, merited charges that were preferred against him, and will have a chance to vindicate himself. Further, in regard to the commissary of the regiment, I would state that our commanding officer is a soldier and a gentleman in every sense of the word. No man has ever doubted his abilities. As for myself, having been in the service since the 21st of April, 1861, (first as private in the Seventy-first New-York State Militia, and since, after having passed examination by a military Board, as commissioned officer,) I am willing, if necessary, to undergo a second examination.

Mr. Editor, the articles appearing in the French journals I do not consider worth the ink used by the authors, whom I consider beneath my notice in all notices. Malice being the motive, the article in question has the effect of disheartening the brave men who feel that abuse unmerited is a poor reward for their service. A soldier has nothing and treasure nothing, and if he receives no credit, he should at least not be misrepresented to the public.

Hoping that you will give this communication a place in your journal, I remain your obedt. servt.,

Lieut. THAD. C. FERRIS,
Adjutant Independent Battalion, N. Y. V.

GRAY VAN ALEN, Yonkers, Aug. 31, 1862.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

Military Doings in the City.

ARRIVAL AND DEPARTURE OF THE ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEENTH REGIMENT N. Y. V.

The One Hundred and Eighteenth Regiment N. Y. V., raised in Warren, Clinton and Essex Counties, arrived in this City yesterday morning from Plattsburgh, where it has been organized, en route for Washington. On arriving in this City, the regiment was marched at once to the Park Barracks, where the men were rested and provided with rations. The regiment has its full complement of men, all of whom are thoroughly uniformed and equipped, and armed with the Enfield rifle. During the afternoon the regiment left for the capital. Subjoined is a list of the principal officers:

Colonel, SHAWN T. BENJAMIN; Lieutenant-Colonel, O. KEESE, Jr.; Major, Geo. F. NICHOLS; Adjutant, E. Prime; Surgeon, Dr. John MOORE; Quartermaster, F. K. DOLONY; Quartermaster-Sergeant, Jas. Northrup; Chaplain, by Col. Rufus Ellsworth, who, but the evening before, had received the colors from the hands of the ladies. The regimental colors, which are very rich and tasty, and have been on exhibition at Bates, Tucker & Co's, Chatham-street, for a few days, are of silk, with the State arms embroidered in the centre, the name of the regiment on a scroll underneath the arms, and the numerals of the regiment in the corners. The National flag has a golden eye of the eagle, grasping in its talons the olive branch and the arrows, and the National flag and regimental eye of this similar to those presented to other regiments. The presentation of the colors taken place to-day.

FIRST SENATORIAL DISTRICT COMMITTEE.

METROPOLITAN BRIGADE.

The regiments of the Metropolitan Brigade, have, although the active exertions of the Police Commissioners, the entire force, been nearly completed, and that to half full, and the fourth, (now organizing in Brooklyn), is recruiting very rapidly. The officers of this last regiment were only opened on Monday, and between 300 and 400 men have already been sent into camp.

THE EMPIRE BRIGADE.

The First regiment of Scott's Empire Brigade has recruited up to the maximum standard, and is prepared for marching orders. The other regiments are progressing favorably, and expect to have their full complement of men in a few day. The brigade is in a very satisfactory condition, and is composed of a class of men who will rival the Excelsior Brigade in doing credit to the State and City that sends them to the war.

THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT N. Y. V.

Lieut. Gustave Bruce, of the Seventy-eighth Regiment (N. Y. V.), commanded by Col. Hassan Tompkins, is now in the City recruiting men to fill this corps to the maximum standard. The recruiting station is at the "Dorrom hut" in the Park, where Lieut. Bruce can be seen, and pay the bounty, in addition to the United States and State bounties, to all able-bodied, native young fellows who wish to join this first-class organization. As soon as the men are enrolled, relief tickets will be issued to the families of volunteers, and Dr. Cyrus Ramsay, of No. 123 East Thirty-third-street, has volunteered his professional services gratuitously to the families of all members of this regiment during their absence at the seat of war.

TEN MORE REGIMENTS TO MARCH AT ONCE.

Orders have been sent to ten more New-York regiments to march at once, which they will do this week, with the exception of their bounty, and be paid all that is due them by the State. The following are the regiments ordered to leave: The One Hundred and Thirtieth, Col. Fullerton; the One Hundred and Twenty-eighth, Col. Savage; the One Hundred and Twenty-fifth, Col. Vocum; the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth, Col. Maxie; the One Hundred and Twenty-ninth, Col. Shaw; the One Hundred and Twelfth, Col. A. P. Allen; the One Hundred and Nineteenth, Col. Pinkney; Col. Turnbull's regiment, First Metropolitan Guard, and Col. Gurney's regiment, the Monitors.

THE SEVENTH REGIMENT, N. Y. S. M.

The mustering out of the Seventh Regiment did not take place yesterday, as was expected, but has been postponed till to-morrow, the unexpired order having been issued to that effect:

THE SEVENTH REGIMENT GENERAL ORDER.

HEADQUARTERS SEVENTH REGIMENT, New-York, Sept. 2, 1862.

The regiment will assemble in fatigue uniform, (without knapsack, haversack and canteen) at the armory, on Friday, the 5th inst., at 12½ o'clock P. M., to be mustered out of the service of the United States.

MARSHALL LEFFERTS Colonel Comm'ng.

EXCELSIOR BRIGADE.

There is not a livelier recruiting station in this City than that of the Empire (Desilver) Brigade in the City Hall Park. The brigade has covered itself with glory during the past few days, gaining laurels more brilliant, if possible, than those it gathered in the Peninsula. It has lost a great many men though, and needs a large number of recruits.

DONATIONS ACKNOWLEDGED BY THE NATIONAL WAR COMMITTEE.

CHARLES GOULD, Treasurer.

RICHARDS BRIGADE.

Capt. J. E. Chadwick, Third Regiment, who is recruiting for this brigade, has removed his headquarters from No. 548 Broadway to No. 120 Bowery, corner of Grand-street. All wishing to enroll in this band of tried soldiers, must do so at once. The City, State and Government bounties are paid without delay.

THE STANDER LEGION.

has been ordered to march for the seat of war on Saturday next. Col. Allen will return to-day from Washington, with orders from the War Department which will, it is expected, greatly facilitate the departure of the First Regiment of the Legion, which is now complete, and has the filling up of the Second and Third Regiments. The excellent discipline instituted in camp by Col. Allen, and ably maintained by Maj. Van Wagenen, Commandant of the Post, has made of this regiment one of the finest volunteer corps which has yet been formed in the vicinity of New-York. Brig.-Gen. Sumner visited the camp at New-Brunswick for the last time, and after witnessing the morning dress parade, inspection, dress parade, &c., said that the Stander regiment was the finest he had seen in the State. A grand ball will be given on to-morrow evening (Friday) evening, by the regimental officers, at Niblo's Garden, New-York, at 8, as a farewell to their friends and a portion of the proceeds of the entertainment will be given to the relief of the Sanitary Commission, and Col. Allen's family.

MOVEMENTS OF GORGRAS.

A general levee, held by Gen. Gorgrasz yesterday morning, at the Astor House, a large number of prominent gentlemen interested in the formation of his brigade were present.

A number of commissions were issued to men desiring to open recruiting offices. There is every prospect that Already regiment being added to his command, and that he may, in a few weeks are, at the head of five full regiments. He will be at the order of Gen. Wadsworth, and will attend the performances of Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Pickrell, at Niblo's Garden, to-morrow evening.

PROGRESS OF THE ALLOTMENT SYSTEM.

The success of the allotment system with the regiments from this State, under the late call, is so far very gratifying, and is to be attributed, in a great degree, to the favorable aid received in many places from eminent and influential men, particularly from the Senatorial Committees. It is becoming evident that the large sums that our soldiers to their relatives, and which might otherwise be worse than wasted, will not only form a provision for the relatives but will at the same time greatly increase the comfort of the community at home. For example: Ninety-six men of Company F, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Regiment, have allotted in the aggregate $3,104, and the allotments of several regiments will average respectively not less than $12,000 every day. We therefore, with your permission, appeal through the Press, to men of local influence throughout the State for their assistance in bringing the subject before the people, and recommending the system to all who have relatives, or are about to enlist. We will arrange, if possible, to be present when the Paymaster-General of the State pays the State bounty.

Respectfully,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
WILLIAM E. DODGE, Jr.,
THEODORE B. BRONSON,
U. S. Allotment Commissioners.

BROOKLYN, Aug. 29, 1862.

Funeral of the Late Gen. W. Bethune, D. D.

The funeral ceremonies of the late Rev. George W. Bethune, D. D., were numerously attended yesterday afternoon, at the Collegiate Church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street.

Dr. Bethune was settled successively at Rhinebeck, Utica, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, and in this City. His theology was of the older Calvinistic type, and he was warmly attached to the Dutch Reformed Church, to whose service his substantial life was passed; but his heart surpassed denominational limits, and was in lively catholic sympathy with all who look for life and salvation through the cross of the Lord. Though a favorite speaker before popular assemblages, and among the most distinguished and acceptable of lecturers, he had the highest appreciation of the dignity and usefulness of the Christian ministry, and several times declined invitations to prominent and responsible literary positions, preferring to retain his place in the pulpit. His last public service was performed in a Protestant chapel at Florence, on the morning of April the 27th. Recognizing a friend from Brooklyn in his congregation, he walked with him to his lodgings, after the worship, and was there seized with the apoplectic stroke, from which, after several hours of unconsciousness, death released him.

His body was embalmed and brought to this City that it might be laid with the dust of his kindred in Greenwood.

At 2 o'clock the friends of the deceased, many of the clergy of the City, the consistory of the Twenty-first-street Church, the Professors of the Theological Seminary of New-Brunswick, the Council of New-York University, a deputation from the former pastorate of Dr. Bethune in Philadelphia and very many from his more recent charge in Brooklyn, assembled at the Twenty-first-street Dutch Reformed Church.

The church was appropriately and mournfully decorated, and the coffin rested upon the table in front of the pulpit. The coffin was rich and plain, and the plate bore the simple inscription:

GEO. W. BETHUNE,
Born in New-York, March, 1805.
Died at Florence, Italy, April 1862.

The only exercise at this church and time, was a short prayer by Rev. Dr. Vermilye, after which the coffin was taken to the church at the corner of Fifth-avenue and Twenty-ninth-street, followed by the following named pall-bearers: Rev. Drs. Van Nest, Hutton, Storrs, Van Dyke, Adams, Prime, Cox, Vinton, Kennedy and Smith. Officiating clergy, Rev. Drs. Quackenbush, Vermilyea, Hardenburg, Chambers, Duryea and Ferris; the various societies of which Dr. Bethune was a member, and the clergy.

As the funeral procession entered the church sweet-toned harmonies rolled from the organ through its arches.

The church was well filled, and after the coffin was deposited upon the table, the following order of exercises was pursued:

Brown's Funeral Chant, by the choir of twelve voices.

Reading an appropriate portion of the Liturgy, by Rev. Chancellor Ferris.

Prayer, by the Rev. D. L. M. Quackenbush.

Hymn, written by Dr. Bethune—

"It is not all of life to live,
Nor all of death to die."

Funeral Address, by Rev. Dr. Hutton.

Address, by Rev. Dr. Willitts.

Prayer, by Rev. J. W. K. Taylor.

Hoffman's Doxology—

"Now unto him that loveth us."

After which the body was taken to Greenwood, followed by the relatives and friends of the deceased.

The Steam Battery Weehawken.

The new steam floating battery Weehawken is nearly finished, and will be launched in the course, probably, of the coming fortnight.

There are over four hundred workmen constantly employed upon her, and there is every prospect that she will be ready for work by the specified time of one hundred and twenty days from the date of contract.

The bulkheads consist of two feet of solid white oak, which is plated with iron armor one inch in thickness.

We learn that Messrs. Cromwell & Co. have also, during the past week, laid the keel of another battery, and have entered into a contract with the Government to build two more of the same size as the Weehawken.

The Weehawken lies at the foot of South Eighth-street, Jersey City.

Woman's Central Association of Relief, No. 11 Cooper Union, Third-avenue.

To our Branch Relief Associations, and to all who are interested in the cause of our wounded soldiers:

We want lint, and bandages and hospital clothing. We want money to buy stimulants and to enable us to forward these supplies to Washington.

On Sunday we received a telegram asking for a hundred barrels of lint and bandages. We were only able to send thirty-four. Other telegrams directed us to forward hospital clothing and stimulants, and to-night we send our storerooms empty of them.

The time has now come when every man and every woman, for the love of our country, and those who have given their lives to it, should feel it to be his and her special duty to do the utmost to alleviate the sufferings of our wounded soldiers.

We are working in connection with the Medical Bureau at Washington, through the United States Sanitary Commission, and ask for a prompt response to this appeal.

Bandage-rollers can be obtained of Messrs. Altheaus & Sons, No. 70 Houston-street. Old linen for lint can be had at this office.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

THE ABORTION CASE IN THIRTEENTH-STREET—THE CORONER'S INQUEST NOT CONCLUDED.—Coroner Naubaus yesterday continued the inquest in the case of Mrs. Cunnamine Galbraith, whose body was found on Tuesday morning at a house in West Thirteenth-street, under circumstances which rendered it almost certain that a great crime had been committed, an account of which we gave in yesterday's Times. Next little evidence tending to throw light upon the dark mystery was elicited yesterday. Several witnesses were examined, among them Mrs. Johnson, the proprietor of the house, where the body was found. She testified that the deceased was sent to her house by Dr. Cox; that she had previously made an arrangement with him to take a lady who was coming from the country to be nursed, and she supposed it was this country lady, until deceased had been in her house for several hours. The burial certificate, which was given by Dr. Sherrill, states that the deceased died of inflammation of the bowels. The post-mortem examination, made by Dr. Reinhard, Deputy Coroner, shows that she died from a very different cause. The inquest with her resumed at 9 o'clock, this morning, when it is believed that some very startling evidence will be given. Coroner Naubaus, aided by the Police, has been engaged in working up the case, and all believe that there is evidence enough to convict some of the parties who have been apprehended.

GENERAL SESSIONS.—In the General Sessions yesterday, Judge McCunn sitting, the usual amount of business was got through with, resulting as follows: Bridge Jackson, having pleaded not guilty to an indictment for grand larceny, in stealing one bale of wool, valued at $100, the property of the Commercial Steamboat Company, was tried, convicted and remanded for sentence. Nelson Lane, Gustave Brown, a burglar by profession, was tried and convicted of a misdemeanor charge with a police upon Maurice Barnes, on the 20th of July last, and sentenced to the State Prison for three years. George Jones pleaded guilty to an attempt at grand larceny, in stealing one room from Barnes Barnes, at his house, No. 664 Ninth-avenue. James McNamara pleaded guilty to an indictment for an assault and battery upon the person of Martin Burke, and James Keaton for the same offence upon Peter Larkin. Sentence in these cases was reserved, and the prisoners remanded. Nicholas Fitzgerald pleaded guilty to a charge of opening a sealed letter, addressed to Bridget Gilmartin, and containing money, sent by her husband, a soldier in the Union army, but pleaded not guilty to stealing the $20. The trial set down for new day.

ARREST ON SUSPICION OF ARSON.—Officer Patterson, of the Sixteenth Precinct, yesterday arrested Hubert Rauschenbusch, on suspicion of feloniously setting fire to his dwelling, No. 348 West Seventeenth-street. Fire-Marshal Baker has commenced an investigation. The testimony thus far shows that the prisoner removed the most of his property the day previous to the fire, and that he had not been absent from his apartments more than ten minutes when the fire was discovered. He had an insurance of $600 on his furniture, which is said to be more than double its value. The same day that he removed his goods from his house, he took them to a loft office in the Bowery, and obtained $100 in cash. The accused was taken before Justice Kenny, who required him to find bail in the sum of $2,000, to answer the charge of arson.

A MYSTERIOUS DEATH.—An Irish girl, twenty-three years of age, named Mary Ann Doherty, was found dead, yesterday, in her room, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Mr. Larone, No. 124 West Thirty-fourth-street. A few hours previously she was with the family, in apparently good health. When found, she was lying upon the floor, face downward. Coroner Ranney was immediately notified, and caused a post-mortem examination to be made, when it was discovered that the deceased was enceinte. The contents of the stomach were taken and sent to a chemist for analysis. The result will probably be made known to-day, when the inquest will be concluded. The deceased was respectably connected, and was a very beautiful and accomplished young lady.

"McClellan; Who He Is and What He Has Done."—This is the significant title which the publishers of an article upon Gen. McClellan, written by George Wilkes, have put upon the cover of the neat pamphlet, in which form the matter is reprinted. The singular insight into military affairs, the apt faculty of judicious criticism, and the undeniable array of facts presented by the author, more than warrant the friends of Mr. Wilkes in their seemingly extravagant laudation of his abilities and claim for his first-class rating as a military writer. The article takes strong grounds against Gen. McClellan as a leader, a planner and a patriot; his non-activity upon the Peninsula, and the sacrifice of so many thousands of lives, are attributed to something worse than blundering incapacity.

FIRE IN TWELFTH-AVENUE.—At an early hour on Tuesday night, a barn belonging to Mr. Alvin Higgins, in Twelfth-avenue, between One Hundred and Thirty-fourth and One Hundred and Thirty-fifth streets, took fire, and was entirely consumed. The loss was about $1,000. It was insured for $300 in a City Company.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

The Kings County Republican General Committee.

At a regular meeting of the Kings County Republican General Committee, on Tuesday night, Mr. W. H. Gemmer, of the Eleventh Ward, offered the following preamble and resolutions, stating that one year ago he might have been ahead of the times, but now he thought the time had come when people were prepared to indorse such sentiments:

Whereas, Experience teaches us the aims of the existing rebellion is the sovereignty of Slavery, and that it must be crushed or the best Government of the world be subverted, and it is better that every rebel in arms should die, sooner than another loyal man perish;

Whereas, The face of the Republican Party looks ever toward freedom and justice to all men, both white and black.

Resolved, That we urge the Administration which we assisted to put in power, to employ in the army both free and enslaved colored men, and to use every means known to civilized warfare, to crush out the rebellion; and we hold it to fulfill the legend inscribed upon the old bell which swung Independence Hall in 1776, at the Declaration of Independence, announced to all the world the birth of freedom, "proclaiming liberty to all the land and to all the inhabitants thereof;" that we call upon it to issue in language so plain that he who runs may read, that shall run through mountains and valley, and fly from cabin to cabin of the South, that the fundamental law of this free land guarantees protection and liberty, and freedom to every man, of every color, or race, or condition, who in this hour of need strikes for his country, for freedom and for God.

A brief discussion ensued, in which Messrs. Wm. Hunt, Wm. Cox, Joseph Reiva and others participated—all, with the exception of the mover and the Assistant Secretary, opposing any action at the present time in relation to the Slavery question. The resolution was, on motion of Mr. Hunt, referred to the Executive Committee, where, he stated, "it would sleep the sleep of death."

The Brooklyn Regiments.—Recruiting was quite brisk yesterday. Col. Jourdan's First Regiment of the Empire Brigade required 47 men the night previous, to fill up two companies, (the others having their quota,) and these were procured before noon. The Colonel and several Captains proceeded to Albany last night to obtain their commissions. Col. Cox's Second Senatorial Regiment has been full for nearly a week, and is encamped on the Park near the Navy-yard. One or two companies are still engaged in recruiting, however. There are about 1,100 names on the muster-roll. The men of neither regiment are yet fully uniformed, and have not muskets enough for guard duty. The headquarters of Col. Blunt's Third Senatorial Regiment have been opened in the marble building on the corner of Schermerhorn and Court streets. Recruiting agents were sent out on Long Island and to Staten Island yesterday. The Fourth Metropolitan Regiment, Col. Monroe, are doing a good business. Yesterday 50 men were enlisted, which makes a total of over 400 since Saturday. Some of the recruits have been sent to camp on Riker's Island. Should the State bounty be continued for two weeks longer both these new regiments will be filled up.

Killed by Falling Down a Hatchway.—Coroner Nozres held an inquest yesterday upon the body of John Haggerty, who died from injuries sustained by falling down the hatchway of the steamer Manhattan lying at Atlantic Dock. A verdict in accordance was rendered.

The Democratic Union Primaries.—The National wing of the Democratic County Committee have directed primaries to be held in the Third, Fifth and Sixth Assembly Districts, on Friday evening next, to elect delegates to the Democratic State Convention.

Dropped Dead.—Yesterday afternoon Mr. Jas. Kelly, residing in Fifteenth-street, near Fourth-avenue, fell down dead in the street, supposed to be from apoplexy. The Coroner was notified.

The Ward Bounties.—The Eleventh Ward Committee will pay bounties to the men in Col. Cox's Regiment at Camp Arthur, this afternoon. Those credited to the Ward are only to be paid.

The Kings County Supreme Court—Special Term.—The Special Term of the Supreme Court, Judge Lott presiding, was yesterday adjourned until Monday, Sept. 15, at 9½ o'clock A. M.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Our army in Virginia appears to be gradually falling to the immediate vicinity of Washington. The determined attacks of the rebels on our supply-trains in the rear of Gen. Pope, which came near being successful on Sunday, were persisted in with such vigor, that a large force was sent to parts unknown to fix. A company of the Second United States Cavalry, under Capt. HIGBY, were taken prisoners, but the object of the rebels was temporarily filled. With a view to secure our trains beyond peradventure, our forces were, on Monday, pushed forward from Centreville to Fairfax Court-house, RENO'S Division leading, and McDOWELL'S following. Near Fairfax Court-house, about 4 P. M. on Monday, RENO'S Division met a detachment of the rebel Gen. HILL'S Division, under Gen. JACKSON, and a sanguinary conflict ensued. Gens. REYNOLDS and STEVENS immediately formed in line of battle, but, while gallantly leading a charge, the latter was instantly killed by a Minié ball. He drove the enemy before them. It was in this engagement that Gen. KEARNEY lost his life. Skirmishing was kept up about three hours, when the enemy were forced to retire with a loss. At another point, on the same day, however, fortunate enough to capture a train of a hundred of our supply wagons. The latest accounts from the rebel army state that Gen. JACKSON established his headquarters on the Warrenton Turnpike, three miles beyond Bull Run; that he was assisted our men in burying the dead, [illegible] so hungry and thirsty that they eagerly [illegible] the haversacks and clothes of the corpses, and finally that the rebel army is advancing to Thoroughfare Gap.

The City was [illegible] yesterday by a rumor, originating with the Philadelphia Bulletin, that Stonewall JACKSON was marching on Baltimore with 40,000 men. The rumor story was exploded soon after the adjournment of the Stock Board.

The guerrilla PETTIGREW has at last been captured, while asleep in a house about twenty miles from Hudson, on the Hannibal and Missouri Railroad. A dispatch from St. Joseph says he has been condemned, and will be hung as a spy. His confreres are, however, busy in Kentucky and Missouri. Col. MUNDY'S regiment had a severe fight with FORREST'S band, near Woodbury, on Thursday, and defeated them, capturing fifteen prisoners, killing eight, and wounding thirty. Our loss was one killed and five wounded. The guerrillas were repulsed near McMinville with heavy loss. Major LAWRENCE has obtained a signal victory over the guerrillas in Southeast Missouri, completely routing Col. WEIRS, capturing all his wagons and stores, and with but slight loss to our forces.

The excitement in Cincinnati continues, and citizens are rapidly enrolling themselves for the defence of the city, and industriously working on fortifications on the Kentucky hills. The rebels, about thirty thousand strong, are reported to be within forty miles of the city, and are expected to make a demonstration on Thursday. Every preparation is being made for a vigorous defence. There is no telegraph communication beyond Paris.

The Kentucky Legislature is in session at Louisville, and is inaugurating vigorous measures for the defence of the State. Maj.-Gen. WRIGHT has declared Martial law in Jefferson County. Citizens are speedily removing their property across the Ohio.

Gov. GAMBLE, of Missouri, has made a requisition on the St. Louis banks for $150,000, to be advanced in anticipation of the money to be collected under the assessment-law recently passed, to enable the authorities to purchase arms for the defence of the State. The banks make a virtue of necessity and patriotically comply.

The Philadelphia Press of yesterday says: "The New Ironsides, Capt. TURNER, arrived at the Navy-yard last evening, having returned from her trial trip. She comes here to get her masts, rigging, &c., in order that she may with safety go to sea. She is reported as being a complete success, and will exceed the expectations of her builders."

GENERAL NEWS.

The steamship Asia, from Liverpool on the 23d of August, has reached Halifax, bringing two days later intelligence. The vigilance of the Government in watching rebel craft shocks the loyalty of the authorities in Ireland. The London Times takes a gloomy view of late American advices. The Herald thinks the draft will shake the States to its very foundation. The English political news is unimportant. Harvest operations were progressing more favorably. The French Minister of War had freighted some English steamers for the Mexican Expedition. The news from Italy is unimportant. Sicily has been proclaimed in a state of siege, and Gen. CIALDINI appointed Civil and Military Chief of the Island. The Ministry have addressed a report to the King, declaring the Garibaldi enterprise to be a rebellion, and urging energetic measures to put it down. The liberty of the Press in Sicily has been suspended. The Madrid journals continue to denounce the terms in which NAPOLEON addressed Gen. CONCHA, when he presented to him his credentials as Ambassador from Spain. Extraordinary activity in cotton at Bombay is announced. In American Stocks, the market held an upward tendency. Consols, 95¼@95¾.

The screw steamship City of Washington, Capt. WILLIAMSON, which left Liverpool at 11 P. M. on the 9th, and Queenstown on the 21st of August, arrived here yesterday morning. Her advices had been anticipated.

A special dispatch to the Philadelphia Press, dated at Washington, Sept. 2, gives these particulars of the death of the gallant Gen. KEARNEY: "Gen. KEARNEY, while making a reconnoissance alone, last night, was fired at from a ravine, and instantly killed. The ball struck in the hip, and passed into the abdomen. His body was sent into our lines to-day, under flag of truce, by Gen. LEE, and arrived here this evening in charge of Maj. BIDDLE. It will be embalmed, and sent to his home. Army officers here think this the greatest loss we have sustained during the war, and freely acknowledge that we had no abler General in the service. Gen. McCLELLAN wept bitterly at the sight of his dead body here, to-night." Per contra, a near relative of Gen. KEARNEY states that a telegraphic dispatch was yesterday morning received from Capt. BRUNING, of the General's Staff, dated Tuesday, Sept. 2, saying that Gen. KEARNEY is a prisoner in the hands of the rebels, only slightly wounded, if at all. The dispatch was addressed to the General's legal adviser at Newark, and by him sent to Mrs. KEARNEY, who is the relative of the General saw it and read it.

In these days of disaster it is gratifying to know that the King of Siam is with us. At the Union meeting in New-Haven, on Monday afternoon, Commodore FOOTE read an autograph letter from that high and mighty potentate, PAWARRENDRAMEEN by name, in which the royal writer expressed his sincere regret that the American Republic had become involved in civil war—a war which, from the number of battles reported, must be exceedingly bloody. He expressed the hope that the contest would not be long, and that the Union would be restored; but he was apprehensive from the nature of the intelligence received, that it might be long, and possibly result in the success of the South. He expressed his earnest hope that the revolted States would be induced to return to their allegiance, and that this great people remain prosperous and happy.

The Board of Education met at 5 P. M. yesterday, W. E. CURTIS, Esq., presiding. The resignation of Mr. JOHN DAVENPORT, School Commissioner for the Twenty-first Ward, was announced. That gentleman was then elected Finance Clerk in the stead of Mr. FOOSER resigned, and after authorizing the Sch. Officers of the Seventh Ward to advertise for estimates and proposals for the construction of a new primary schoolhouse on the site of lots Nos. 68 and 70 Monroe-street, pursuant to the plans and specifications prepared by the Superintendent of School Buildings, the Board adjourned.

A large auction sale of Southdown sheep, took place yesterday afternoon, on the farm of Mr. J. C. TAYLOR, near Holmdell, New-Jersey. About fifty of the finest specimens of Mr. TAYLOR'S flock were sold, comprising the choicest blood of the famous English breeder, JONAS WEBB. The attendance was large and the prices realized, considering the times, remarkably good. The total sales amounted to upward of $2,000.

For the first time since the late battles in Virginia, there was some panic feeling in Wall-street yesterday. Stocks fell 1@2 ⅌ cent. and Exchange and Gold advanced about 2 ⅌ cent. Gold, at the close of the day.

A further improvement occurred in the market for Cotton, yesterday, though the sales were less extensive. It appears that the stock in this City on Monday last was under 17,000 bales. Liberal sales of Breadstuffs were effected; desirable lots of Flour, Wheat and Corn were quite firm. Provisions attracted more attention at unchanged figures. The movements in Groceries, Oils, Metals, Hemp, Hides, Skins, Seeds, and Fruit were limited. Whisky was depressed and cheaper. A good inquiry prevailed for Tallow, Wool, and Kentucky Tobacco. The Freight market was less active. There were 470 vessels of all classes in port.

The Rumors of Yesterday.

The selections made by the telegraph yesterday from the confused medley of dispatches in the Philadelphia papers, excited momentarily the profoundest alarm in the City. Pope, it was stated, was in full retreat to Washington, while JACKSON, having chosen Edwards' Ferry as the proper point for crossing the Potomac, was already urging his march upon Maryland. Later information served to correct these rumors. The very telegraph, which always sympathizes curiously with the bear movements of Wall-street, seems to have repented at the end of an hour or two the mischief it had done in catching up and exaggerating a foolish and baseless rumor, and came halting in with corrections and explanations. It was true Gen. Pope was arranging to render his lines of communication more secure from a flank attack, and was, therefore, drawing in his army so as to rest upon the lines of Arlington; and it might have been true that JACKSON had designs upon Maryland; but the latter statement was purely a bit of street gossip, originated doubtless among the panic-makers of the Capital, and greedily gathered up and sent flying all abroad by a correspondent, whose faculty of inventing news happened at the moment to be costive. At the hour we go to press there is nothing to indicate the departure of JACKSON from the main rebel force at Bull Run. For once that active officer has been outmarched by a lying rumor. Hereafter the public will do well to receive all stories circulated immediately before and during the sessions of the Stock Exchange with great caution. The principal business of the morning Press has been for a long time to contradict the telegraphic bouncers of the evening papers; and with this obvious fact patent in the experience of every reader, and with the equally obvious certainty that falsehood is especially profitable from 12 M. to 4 P. M. daily, they who lose coin or courage on the faith of fallacious reports, must console themselves with the reflection that they have only themselves to blame.

THE SITUATION IN KENTUCKY.—The defeat of Gen. NELSON at Richmond, Ky., is the severest reverse that has befallen the Union arms in that State. It opened the richest portion of that fine agricultural Commonwealth to the enemy. He will find there abundance of corn, and the finest beeves in the West, and no stint of horses and mules, to facilitate his transportation. The most of this abundant and valuable property belongs to loyalists, and it will be not the less acceptable to the rebels on that account.

Gen. KIRBY SMITH'S advance into Kentucky is of infinitely more injury than a dozen of MORGAN'S hasty raids. MORGAN came too suddenly, and left too soon for his presence to be very harmful or discouraging. Gen. SMITH, however, comes in force, and is prepared to seize, to keep and carry off all the portable wealth that he needs or desires.

It is given out that KIRBY SMITH'S army numbers 14,000 men, and that he is advancing on Cincinnati. It is hardly probable that he will attempt so futile a thing as the capture of Cincinnati. He cannot capture it, in fact, because he cannot cross the Ohio. The worst he could do would be to shell it and destroy much private property, which is not an object with a wise General. It is not likely, however, that Gen. SMITH will reach Cincinnati. He cannot do so, if the fortifications for the protection of that city are half manned. While Gen. MCCLELLAN was in command at Cincinnati last Fall, he engineered and constructed a cheap but very effectual line of defences on the hills of the Kentucky shore, opposite Cincinnati, commanding all the approaches to the city. If these are occupied, as they doubtless will be, no enemy so little formidable as KIRBY SMITH will be able to approach near enough to do the slightest harm to the city, except through extraordinary default on the part of the defenders. With such a General as LEW. WALLACE at hand, we think we need not fear.

What force there is at Louisville, Ky., we are not fully advised. There are two Union camps in the vicinity of that city, into which large numbers of the new regiments of Ohio and Indiana have been thrown for drill. These are not the best of troops, being too raw, as were NELSON'S for KIRBY SMITH'S veterans, but still behind breastworks or on the defensive, on favorable ground, they can be relied on.

OUR expectation is that the rebel army will be content to hold Lexington, Richmond, Danville and other rich towns of Central Kentucky for a time, in order to gather up stores for the Southern armies, and that their demonstrations against cities is meant mainly to concentrate attention on them and save themselves from interruption while their foraging and plundering goes on. We trust Gen. WRIGHT will be able to dislodge them before they ravage so rich a country.

Invading the North.

The rebels are showing by their present audacious and desperate advances that they understand the true theory of war, even if they have not so far enjoyed the advantages of that understanding. They always boasted, before they commenced their rebellion, that when the time came for fighting the North, the battles should all be fought on Northern soil; that they would subsist their armies on the products of Northern farms, and dictate their terms of peace at the gates of Northern cities.

But, although they had the advantage of the first blow, and had cunningly contrived through the treachery of Cabinet Ministers under BUCHANAN to disarm the National Government, so that it might fall an easy victim to their violence, the early course of the war by no means justified their anticipations. No battle has yet been fought on Northern soil; no Northern home has yet been ravaged by them or abandoned at their presence, and Northern cities still flourish to afford means of successful warfare against the rebellion. All the desolation so far that follows in the track of war is to be found in that land whose crime provoked its wrath. We have only to remember Eastern Virginia, the Beaufort District of South Carolina, New-Orleans, the chief city of the South, Memphis, Nashville, and the greater part of the States of Tennessee and Arkansas, to realize the bitter disappointments under which the rebels have for nearly a whole year been groaning.

It is natural that they should wish to throw off the incubus of our armies, and draw breath freely again. It is a positive necessity that they do so; for their whole strength is in the field and wasting away, and the opportunity of success is—now or never. The energy of their movements at present is the energy of despair. They have resolved to risk all on the hazard of the die, and by one superhuman effort to restore the prestige which their habitual boasts and their early audacity gave them.

But we do not feel alarmed by their furious onsets. We are surprised to find that any portion of our citizens regard the present demonstrations with feelings of undue apprehension. The rebels cannot conduct a campaign through the Northern States. They held a long line of defence last Winter, stretching from Norfolk to Springfield, Mo.; but they found it a source of weakness, and admitted, after the Union armies had penetrated it, that they had "attempted too much." And the Union armies, after they had dispersed the rebel army at Corinth, found their progress stayed because there was no army to assault, and their strength was thenceforth exhausted in trying to guard what country they had overrun. Are we to suppose that a rebel army, piercing through the hostile populations of Ohio or Pennsylvania, would have a different experience from our own in Tennessee and Alabama?

But the parallel does not even end here. Suppose that the rebel armies are allowed, without opposition on our part, to invade the Northern States, and are permitted to make their way the best they can, over broken railroads and across rivers, whose bridges are destroyed, toward Philadelphia and New-York. It will take all their available strength for such an undertaking. Who then will stand guard over their homes, and save them from the insurrection of slaves that would very surely follow their departure? The great objection against edicts of emancipation by the President has been that there was no power to enforce except by military presence. We could deprive rebels of their slaves only as we advanced into their territory and came into possession of their property. If the rebel armies leave their own ground to come North, this difficulty will be overcome, and our shrewdest policy might be only to embarrass their march by broken bridges and other impediments, and to send large armies into their own abandoned homes, with a proclamation of freedom and protection to slaves. We doubt whether the rebels would debate long which party would suffer most by this mutual invasion.

We should remember, however, that it is not so easy for the rebels "to invade the North," as it is for them to threaten to do so. Two great rivers lie in their way at the very threshold of their march. The Potomac and the Ohio are serious obstructions to an army that has neither boat nor bridge, and no time to build either; and fording, with artillery, is not a very promising mode of overcoming the difficulty. We await, therefore, with entire confidence and patience, the early explosion of the rebel threat to invade the North, to which his present furious demonstrations have lent some show of consistency.

GEN. MCCLELLAN'S NEW COMMAND.—The appointment of Gen. McCLELLAN to the command of the Army of Virginia, will be received with a very general feeling of surprise; and most bly with distrust and dissatisfaction. It will be remembered, however, that while the army is defending Washington, the command is immediately in the hands of Gen. HALLECK, and that practically Gen. McCLELLAN is no more than the medium through which the orders of the General-in-Chief are communicated to subordinate officers. Not only the plan of operations, but its execution, will be due to Gen. HALLECK. Upon his shoulders will rest the entire responsibility. The alarmists, who detect in the nomination of McCLELLAN matter of fresh apprehension, have small capital to go upon.

The Light of Experience.

It has been sagely said, that to most men experience is like the stern-lights of a ship, which illumine only the track it has passed. It will be a very sad thing for this Republic if those who now direct its destinies are recorded by history in such a category. Never in the life of a nation was there greater need of that peculiar sagacity which employs the acquired light of yesterday in the selection of a path for to-morrow, than in the United States to-day. On its presence or its absence in the places of power depends our whole future destiny. It is to decide whether we remain a great people, homogeneous, united and powerful, or take the first fatal step of disintegration which will lead us to the position of those petty States, whose weight in the world's councils is represented by a cypher, and whose little quarrels only provoke a smile.

We have passed something over sixteen months in the task of endeavoring to preserve the Union,—the Union whose integrity has been assailed by a clique of dexterous and ambitious scoundrels heading a vast mob of semi-civilized rabble. Unprepared at the outset, and surrounded by innumerable difficulties accumulated through the imbecility, if nothing worse, of the last Chief Magistrate, we were fortunate in being able to break the first surge of treason. In this there was abundant reason for congratulation, and, in spite of some unhappy mistakes, little ground was discovered in the conduct of affairs on which to predicate grave censure. Practically at peace for so many years, the public felt that the plans of the Government would naturally for a time partake of the character of experiments; not a few blunders were therefore regarded with indulgence as inseparable from the conditions of the case, and the country united with enthusiasm in support of the President and his Cabinet.

The time has now arrived when the national voice earnestly demands that the fruits of past experience shall be made available for the national salvation. Many valuable discoveries have been made at a vast outlay of blood and money, and it is demanded that the knowledge so obtained shall be employed most thoroughly in the conduct of affairs for the future. We have discovered that the rose-colored theory, so much in vogue a year since, that the simple raising of large armies and navies would suppress the rebellion, was an error,—for that it is also necessary, when raised, to use them. We have discovered that the strategical feat of placing a huge force in intrenchments, where they shall be employed for half a year in digging holes and hauling cannon, has not the effect to overcome the enemy,—and that, on the contrary, such a policy is singularly favorable toward giving him every possible facility for marshaling his men and accumulating his resources. We have discovered that nearly every time our forces have been hurled directly upon the enemy, we have been victorious, as at Port Royal, Fort Donelson, Roanoke and New-Orleans; and that, almost as regularly, when we have waited for the rebels to attack us, the results have been negative, if not disastrous, as at the bloody series of battles in the Peninsula.

We have discovered that "Union sentiment" will not make itself manifest in the seceded States until those who cherish it are fully satisfied that the National Government has both the power and the will permanently to hold and protect the district in which they may reside. Most especially we have discovered that it will not answer as a general rule of strategy to keep the whole Union army at its base watching half the rebel army for a whole Winter, and then to take half the Union army to fight the whole rebel army at its base in the heat of Summer.

Furthermore, we have found in our foreign relations, that to insure success for our diplomacy it is not sufficient to demonstrate our capacity to raise and equip great armies; it is also necessary to evince both our readiness and our skill in handling them. It must in candor, be allowed that, on the whole, these are qualities which we have not displayed so conspicuously as could be desired. Our men have behaved most admirably, and deserve all that a grateful country can bestow; but, with some notable exceptions, their officers have scarcely deserved to lead them. It appears that good soldiers are more readily made from the American raw material than good officers; a circumstance which suggests the necessity for increased efforts to add to the future efficiency of the latter.

In general, it may be safely assumed that nothing has occurred since the outbreak of the rebellion which need weaken our confidence in the ability of the loyal States to suppress it, provided our leaders are sagacious enough and bold enough to profit by the light of experience. It is certain the people will not meekly tolerate a recurrence of disasters and failures springing from the same causes which have already been put to the test; and lavish as they are disposed to be of troops and treasure, it is to be hoped that whatever discouragements the fortune of war may have in store for us may not arise from a senseless repetition of the blunders of the past.

THE EXEMPT MOVEMENT.—In referring to Mr. SAMUEL HOTALING'S projected brigade of exempts, a day or two since, the "aged and infirm" were named as likely to present themselves for enlistment. Our attention has been directed to an apparent assumption in these words, that men over forty-five are to be properly described as advanced in years, and necessarily disabled. We distinctly disclaim any such meaning. Those who survive middle age are quite likely to do so by the help of about constitutions; and when good constitutions are the possession of the exempts, they are, perhaps, better prepared for the hardships of war than the untried and unseasoned frames of the more youthful. By all means let the Hotaling Brigade of Veterans be raised. The corps will find broad fields for service.

Kearney and Stevens.

The doubts as to the death of Gen. PHILIP KEARNEY seem to be set at rest. In the contest of Monday, that gallant officer, always forgetful of his own safety, fell mortally wounded while leading his men into action; and the country has to deplore the loss of one of its most accomplished, experienced and enterprising officers. Gen. KEARNEY was peculiarly a professional soldier. To a thorough elementary training in the art of war, he had added careful studies of all the great military authorities, with reference to every department of the profession. These studies had been the business of his life; and to give them experimental value he served throughout the Mexican war, it is needless to say, with the highest distinction, and subsequently participated in the Algerian campaigns, and yet more recently in the war of Italian liberation. From the leading French Generals of the time he has received testimonials of the most flattering description, attesting his intrepidity and skill. Had his bravery been attempered with the slightest dash of personal prudence, a career so splendid and so promising would not have been so untimely ended.

The death of Gen. ISAAC STEVENS will also be very sensibly felt. Although, after leaving West Point, and serving briefly in the army, he chose to abandon the profession of arms, and descend to the arena of partisan politics, Gen. STEVENS forgot nothing he had learned; and gifted with profound sagacity and quickness of apprehension, he resumed the sword when the insurrection broke out with more than ordinary preparation for effective usefulness. In the earlier and more important transactions at Port Royal, Gen. STEVENS played a conspicuous and creditable part; and was no less characterized by judicious self-control when more recently obliged to witness the experiments upon the negro instituted by Gen. HUNTER—experiments which the judgment of Gen. STEVENS strongly reprobated. Of the part taken by the deceased in the unfortunate affair of James Island, it is now improper to speak. This only can be said: that whatever injurious suggestions of cowardice associated themselves with his name in connection with that affair, must be forever canceled and silenced by the dauntless bravery of the man on his last battle-field. He fell a victim to his too zealous gallantry.

The people have too few servants of skill, and discretion and zeal to spare any without bitter regret. The two just lost are of the few, and must be mourned deeply and earnestly.

Rebel Ferocity.

In their dawning conviction of the hopelessness of mere civilized warfare to enable them to compass their ends, the rebels have taken a leaf from the annals of the Aboriginals of our country, and seem to put their trust in the adoption of those devilish cruelties and terror-striking torments which are always the final resource of savages when fighting a superior foe. They have, however, neglected to turn to the last page of the history, on which is inscribed, as the crowning result of such luminous tactics, the sad but inexorable word—extermination. Many an unarmed colonist was killed at the plow—many a Christian, male and female, was tortured at the pitiless stake—many a babe was wrenched from the mother's breast and butchered before her eyes—many a scalp with snowy locks adorned the belts of ruthless warriors—many a roof-tree fell blazing in the bitter Winter's night, and crushed the innocent sleepers in the sanctity of home; yet these horrors brought their legitimate fruit in due season, and the record closes with the sweeping destruction of the perpetrators.

As the war progresses, the rebels exhibit an increasing disposition to draw upon the magazine of terrors, whose use has been generally confined to acknowledged barbarians. Their black flags and "no quarter" war-cry, their mutilation of dead bodies and murdering of the sick and wounded, their ghastly child's play of making baubles and trinkets out of human bones, their poisoning of springs and wells, the grinning and gibbering of their women over the coffins of Union soldiers, are the terrible yet instructive symptoms of increasing barbarism and augmented desperation. Indeed, so far as their conduct of the war is concerned, it is not easy to draw a very marked distinction between the Southern rebels and the Sepoys in the late East Indian rebellion.

From the latter illustration, if their reason were unclouded by the madness of the hour, the rebels might draw a most useful lesson. The Sepoys hoped to strike panic to the European soldiery by the practice of appalling tortures, inflicted even on the women and children who fell into their hands. The result is well known; the soldiers knew what their comrades had received, and what they themselves had to expect. They fought, therefore, with astonishing courage and resolution; but when victorious, it was found that the officers were quite unable to deter them from retaliations of a most determined and fearful character. We do not believe men can be found in the National army who would make drinking-cups of rebel skulls, or castanets of rebel bones; but we are confident that the memory of these atrocities will be carried into battle, and that sooner or later they will be most terribly and amply avenged.

Curses are like chickens, and still come home to roost. The proverb is applicable to the outrages wherewith the traitors have essayed to embitter and intensify the war. With our superior numbers, at least equal determination, constantly increasing and invincible navy, enormous resources and steadfast patriotism, the raising of black flags and the cry of "no quarter" would be ridiculous were the subject less mournful; for a very simple mathematical calculation would demonstrate the only retributive conclusion. But that preliminary insanity attributed to those whom the gods wish to destroy, appears to have taken entire possession of the unhappy men who have [illegible] their country in their madness, that [illegible] from all prudent computation, when they [illegible] political [illegible] their country.

The Garibaldi Revolution.

Each mail brings renewed confirmation of the importance of the crisis in Italy; and the telegraphic intelligence by the Asia, published to-day, is of a still more serious cast than any yet received. All illusions taking the shape of a supposed complicity of the Turin Government in the enterprise of GARIBALDI must disappear before the developments that have now arisen. The vote of the Senate, pronouncing the movement a rebellion, has been followed by an order in the official Turin Gazette, of the 21st August, declaring a state of siege in Sicily, and nominating Gen. CIALDINI Extraordinary Commissioner. Gen. CIALDINI immediately issued a proclamation, announcing that the state of things in Sicily must be put an end to; declaring that every armed band or tumultuous meeting will be dispersed by force; and, furthermore, suspending the liberty of the Press. It is also stated that Gen. CIALDINI has been appointed Civil and Military Chief of Sicily, with the fullest powers.

It is obvious that the Italian Government is stretching to the utmost the policy of lenity and conciliation, and is exceedingly loath to come to actual collision with GARIBALDI. The relations which VICTOR EMANUEL holds to the popular leader would naturally prompt this course, even if there be no truth in the report that a considerable number of officers in the royal army had declared they would resign rather than fight against GARIBALDI. There is good reason to believe, however, that the majority of the Italian people are on the side of the Government; and any act of positive aggression by the revolutionary party would doubtless give practical unity to the popular support of VICTOR EMANUEL. He has already the moral support of Europe—at least of all Europe that loves Constitutional Government and rational freedom.

QUITE THE REVERSE.—A telegram from Halifax conveys a startling piece of information. It informs us that the London Herald thinks the draft "will try the temper of the Northern people more than it has ever been tried yet, and strike to its very foundation the tottering edifice of the Union." For once that Secessionist sympathizer is right. The draft does try the temper of the Northern people excessively; but it tries it because the Government does not immediately make it! The strange spectacle is presented of a whole people begging to be drafted. That's a view of the matter that has hardly got through the thick skull of our British contemporary.

A Move in the Right Direction—Burnside's Zouaves.

The war for the suppression of the Southern rebellion has not been signalized thus far by any of those combined movements of masses of troops which won for NAPOLEON the Great his conspicuous victories, which made his Old Guard and his Young Guard famous, and which, in more recent times, gave a name to the famous English Light Brigade. The first efforts of our people, unaccustomed to war-making on a large scale, have given celebrity to single regiments like Hawkins' and Duryee's Zouaves, the Sixty-ninth and other gallant commands; but we have had no overwhelming triumph to record of brigades and divisions, which, uniformly drilled, equipped and disciplined under the eye of a single leader, have decided the fate of battles. It is only because we are new to the business, and have been compelled hitherto to be content with instructing our soldiers in the simple movements which are always preliminary to the combined manœuvres, that these things are so. The time for greater things, we trust, approaches nearer as we grow older in the business of warfare. But before we can do as the French and English have done, we must imitate more closely their first efforts. Before we can hurl an Old Guard, or a Young Guard, or a Light Brigade upon the foe, and achieve with them a victory or stem a defeat, we must first create divisions and brigades as formidable as these.

We are glad to learn that a movement is progressing with great success in this City, which is likely to give us at least one brigade that is likely to be such an one. A second battalion of DURYEE'S ZOUAVES—confessedly one of the best regiments that ever left this metropolis—is already forming. It is to be uniformed like the famous Fifth, is to be officered by those who have distinguished themselves in the ranks of the old regiment, and with it will form part of the brigade of Col. G. K. WARREN, of the Regular Army, who has given DURYEE'S ZOUAVES the discipline and drill for which they have become so widely known. Col. H. D. HUXE, the old Major of the Fifth, will command the new battalion; Major ANSON STRONG, of the Third New-York Volunteers, will be Lieutenant-Colonel, and Capt. GEORGE W. CARR, of DURYEE'S ZOUAVES, will be Major. All three have been from the time the beginning of the war, and understand thoroughly how to make the men soldiers in the shortest possible time. The Second Battalion will be in the field in less time, judging from the progress that is making, than even was consumed in making a regiment before. The movement, of which Mr. D. B. HAMPTON, President of the Ocean Bank, is the projector, is going forward under excellent auspices. A fine body of young men are enrolling themselves, many of them members of well-drilled three-months' regiments just returned. The head quarters are at No. 663 Broadway, (old Minerva Hall.) It is by giving organization to such bodies of intelligent men, with a backing of experienced officers, and a standard like that of the Fifth to rally around, that we must prepare for the fighting of the decisive battles that are to come.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Monday, Sept. 1.

The steamer Constitution arrived yesterday from Panama, touched Acapulco, took Capt. [illegible], late Commander of the Golden Gate, who left Mazatlan on the 17th, after remaining near the wreck twenty-one days. He thinks there is little probability of saving any of the treasure, but efforts will be made during October and November, when the sea is usually quiet.

The ships Wild Fleet and Anglo-Saxon have arrived from New-York; also, the Northern Coast steamer, with 622,000 in treasure from British Columbia, and $200,000 from Oregon.

The Overland Mails.

ATCHISON, KANSAS, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

BENJAMIN HOLLADAY, proprietor of the Overland Stage line, and J. WHITNEY, Jr., arrived to-day. Their time overland from Carson Valley to this place is reported to be 11 days and one hour, including 15 hours detention this side of Salt Lake. No Indians were seen. They represent the new mail route over the Cherokee trail as excellent. Mr. HOLLADAY states that after the 12th inst., the Overland stages will pass daily through Denver City.

HALIFAX, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

The steamship Asia, from Liverpool, at 6 o'clock on the morning of the 23d, via Queenstown on the afternoon of the 24th of August, arrived at this port at 5 o'clock this morning. Her dates are two days later than those per the North American.

The steamship Australasian, from New-York, arrived at Queenstown at 1 o'clock on the afternoon of the 23d of August, and was off Liverpool when the Asia left that port.

The ship Queen of the Sea, arrived at Liverpool on the 23d of August, with 800 bales of cotton and $180,000 in specie, from the Confederate States.

The Asia reports meeting, on the 20th of August, ships Australia, British Queen, Conqueror, W. F. Stevens and Savannah, all bound in to Liverpool.

On the 27th of August, the Asia met the steamship Arabia, and on the 31st, the steamship Roman, both bound to Liverpool.

The Asia has ninety-six passengers.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Dublin correspondent of the London Times writes on the 21st of August, as follows:

"The Federal gunboat Tuscarora, it appears, has been anchored off the Arkan for the purpose of getting coals on board in defiance of the orders issued by the Admiralty. The Tuscarora has coaled within three months at a British port, and did not proceed, as she was bound to do, on a voyage to the United States. She remained hovering about the coast on the look-out for Confederate vessels. She put into Kingstown with the view of getting coals. Unable to accomplish this there, partly in consequence of the return of the Arkan, she weighed anchor and steamed with all speed to Belfast Lough, where, according to a pretty well-founded report, she received a supply of coal, proceeding to a Russian port. Having anchored outside of the jurisdiction of the Harbor Commissioners, a number of Queenstown citizens at once took the matter up and served a notice on the Federal captain to depart within twenty-four hours, and a revenue cutter was placed alongside of the Tuscarora to prevent further violation of the neutrality laws, and at the time that the matter was referred to the Admiralty. The Belfast people did what would have been done if the Federal vessels had refused to leave."

The Times editorially argues that, although the latest edition from America shows an apparent improvement in financial affairs by the abolishment of specie payments, etc., the day must come when the people of the United States will really understand the condition of their own finances, and when that time arrives it doubts not that the principles which have so often been verified, in the bankruptcy of great European monarchies will assert themselves with equal vigor to punish the financial obliquities of the American Republic.

In another article the Times depicts the latest American advices in the most gloomy characters. It says:

"On all sides the political horizon grows blacker and blacker, nor can any chance of peace be discovered, except in the exhaustion or impotence of a belligerent. If the Federals were not blind with fury they would now see what all Europe has seen from the beginning. But the truth, it seems, has yet to dawn, if not on the people at any rate on the Government of the Federal States."

The London Morning Herald speculates on the effect of drafting, and thinks it will try the temper of the Northern people more than it has ever been tried yet, and shake to its very foundation the tottering edifice of the Union. It says:

"New-Yorkers have less reason than other Americans to struggle against the conscription. It is their last hope in the absence now of any nobler or worthier object. It is for the emancipation of their City, and to assert its commercial rule, that a war is being prosecuted, which will convert America into a desert."

Queen Victoria, and the junior branches of the Royal family, were to embark at Gravesend for the Continent on the 26th of August.

There was nothing new in English politics.

Lord PALMERSTON had been speaking in public most large at Dover and Earl DERBY at Manchester, but neither of them said anything of political import.

Harvest prospects were progressing more favorably under the improved state of the weather.

Messrs. CRAMPTON, ANNA & Co., of Liverpool, in the Brazilian trade, had suspended payments. Their liabilities are supposed to be considerable.

FRANCE.

The French Minister of War had freighted some English steamers for the Mexican expedition.

The Italian crisis excited much interest in Paris and the indications of NAPOLEON'S policy were eagerly watched.

M. ROUHER was about to return from Paris to Vichy.

The Constitutionnel, after declaring that the French flag will not retreat before any menace, says:

"We are in hopes that we would not stop before the king which has given freedom to Italy might be a king who would be imposed by force; but it would not be a question of the military question—it would not settle the present difficulty."

The Paris correspondent of the London Times believes, notwithstanding the Constitutionnel's doubts to the contrary, that M. LAVALETTE has given to the Papal cause assurances of the support of France on the question.

The Paris Bourse was dull, at 66f. 75c. for Rentes.

ITALY.

The official Turin Gazette, on the 21st of August, published a decree proclaiming a state of siege in Sicily, and appointing Gen. CORDA Military Governor.

Gen. CORDA forthwith sent the following proclamation:

"Notwithstanding the words of the King, the Parliament, and the forbearance of the Government, there are still, even in spite, time to deluded people to rally round the bands of GARIBALDI established in the interior town.

"Such a condition in these provinces, and the Government is bound to put an end to this state of things, so injurious to the cause of Italy.

"Numerous fatal or unauthorized meetings will be prohibited by force. The liberty of the Press is suspended. The commanders of the divisions of the Island of Palermo, Messina and Syracuse will notify the civil and military powers.

It was reported that GARIBALDI had appointed Nicotera Prefect of Catania.

It was also asserted that a considerable number of officers in the Royal Army had declared they would resign rather than fight against GARIBALDI.

A Turin correspondent says, that as Gen. CORDA has only twenty thousand troops, did not prevent Garibaldi from occupying the sea-port of Catania, troops are freely drawn that the Italian Government does not fear any serious impediment in the way of its plans.

The defendants now move to set aside this judgment, on the ground of irregularity, and to discharge the attachment. Defendant also moves to dismiss.

Postage Currency at a Premium.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Can you tell why the new stamp currency is issued by the Government in such a way that it can only be had at a premium? It does seem that 1/4 might have been issued in small notes, say $10, to each applicant. Instead of this we find that brokers advertise it for sale at a premium. The following is from the Utica Herald of this date:

"About $1,000 of the new postage-bill currency was received by Messrs. A. Wilkinson & Co., bankers of Syracuse, on Tuesday morning. It was speedily bought up by citizens at two per cent. premium."

The Syracuse publishes the name of A. Wilkinson, of Syracuse, as Collector for the Twenty-third District. Now I live in the Twenty-first District, and have no personal feeling in this matter, beyond what every business man has, who has suffered the annoyance of the lack of small change. I hope it is not too late for you to draw the attention of the proper officials to this subject.

GRAND WAR MEETING.

BROOKLYNITES ALIVE TO THE HOUR.

Thirty Thousand People in Assembly.

Speeches of Hon. Hiram Ketchum, Jas. Harlan, Hon. E. D. Morgan, W. E. Robinson, Rev. Dr. Clarke, Major Gen. Wm. James Humphrey, Judge Hall, Mr. Junius Humphrey, Public Schools, Lincoln Guard, and Others.

An enthusiastic session of the Great War Meeting of Saturday last was held last night at the City Hall Park, in Brooklyn.

There were three large stands, finely arranged, handsomely decorated and patriotically bannered. The night was cool, but very beautiful, and the people came out in vast numbers—men, women and children, gathering in the hall of the bells, and formed a gathering at least thirty thousand people.

STAND NO. ONE

Was among the earliest to attract the notice of the approaching crowds, who poured into the Park from street and avenue, in steady streams, until, at a little past the hour to which the meeting had been postponed, they formed a consolidated mass of cheerers, laughers, jokers, jolly—and, what is more to the purpose, determined men." Some little time necessarily elapsed after the hour designated for the opening of the proceedings and that at which, to point of fact, they began; but the people waited patiently and without any sign of impatience, until the speakers, arrived, and then waited long. Mayor KALBFLEISCH, of Brooklyn, said:

Fellow-Citizens: I rejoice to see you here again in such mighty force. It is only a reassurance of the love which you manifest for your country, and your determination to stand by it in hour of danger—(cheers)—and, I suppose, your resolutions to meet all that can be brought against it at any time and under any circumstances, either in blood or in treasure. [Renewed cheers.] I regret that I made a promise that I should have Gen. CODMAN here this evening. We have endeavored to do so, but failed—and for a good reason—the fact that he is in Albany, instead of being here to-night. But I will endeavor to supply his place by the presence of Mr. HOXIE, of Albany. Allow me to introduce to you

MR. JOSEPH HOXIE.

Mr. HOXIE was received with hearty cheers. He began by paying a hearty tribute of praise to Col. CODMAN, whose place he had been called upon to supply. He proceeded to contrast the state of the country eighteen months ago, when it was at peace with all the world, with the condition to which we find it now reduced by the treachery of those who are unworthy of the protection of its flag, and who have sought, by all means within their power, to have our country foreign, trailed in the dust. He had even some doubts whether we should ever let them again enjoy that protection, after having flogged them again, as they ought to be.

After expressing, in terms which drew tears from his eyes, the self-sacrifices and unhesitating devotion which signed all domestic ties in order that the country might be saved, Mr. HOXIE impressively urged the unflinching prosecution of the war against rebellion, which he characterized as the most unjustifiable and the most atrocious that had happened since the days of Moses and the Prophets. He declared that if Slavery were to intervene between the Union and success, it should not be regarded as any obstruction, but sweep incontinently away; and, furthermore, gave the assurance that though, as for himself, he was too old to sustain the hardships of the campaign—for his life, in all probability, was pretty near its close—yet, that before this great audience and before him in whose presence he must appear to answer for the deeds done here, he had no desire to survive the liberties of his country. [Cheers.] If this Government cannot be maintained, he had no desire to live to witness it—[cheers]—and, therefore, if he could not fight, he was willing to give of voice, of exhortation, not of means, so far as he was blessed with them, to uphold this Government in the contest in which it is engaged; for, if this Union was to be destroyed, he did not want money any longer. [Cheers.]

Mr. HOXIE continued his remarks for some considerable time, and was succeeded by

HON. HENRY C. MERRIFIELD,

Who said they had not come together on that occasion to argue the right or wrong of secession or rebellion. The time for argument on that point had passed by. The man who needed to be convinced that the rebellion was a foul conspiracy against the nation—that it was devised not for the purpose of righting wrong, but for the purpose of building up an aristocracy at the South, and that its success would bring ruin on our country, blast the hopes of millions, and bring eternal disgrace and dishonor upon the American name—that man would not be convinced though one should rise from the dead. [Cheers.] He is joined to his idol, and we will let him alone? No; it cares not whether this rebellion succeeds or not, for good and evil to his children seems to nothing but dollars. If it succeeds, then all the evils of separation will follow, and they, certainly, will never be forgotten. Let this rebellion fail—he would not call it a rebellion but a conspiracy, but, let this conspiracy in this country fail—and here, where every man is a judge of public matters, that man who sids it will be doomed to eternal execration. [Cheers.] Therefore, he would say, that man would not be let alone. But it was not to such men he addressed himself to-night. We had come here to renew our confidence in the Government, and express our determination to take prompt action for the security of the Republic. [Cheers.] The Roman instruction in the Bible taught us: But you, every one, that the Republic suffer no harm. We have the Consuls here, but this gives each and every one of you the charge that this Republic is in peril, shall suffer no harm. Read in history and tell me, (said the speaker,) where there has ever been such a country as this? Such a country as this, in which the whole governing race is composed of white freemen? Such a country as this in the fertility of its soil, the variety of its productions, its immense water-power and gigantic manufacturing and agricultural resources? But, more than that, you have a Government which is the asylum of the oppressed nationalities—where free homes are given to free men, and where every man, whether native born or not, may make this his abiding place and home. [Cheers.] That, I say, is the country committed to your care, and that is the country which is sought to be broken up—by whom and for what? By the chivalry of the South? No, but by from 200 to 500 of the men who wish to constitute an oligarchy. [Cheers.] The war, the speaker continued, must go on, and the conspiracy must and shall be put down, even if the South be annihilated from the face of the earth. [Repeated cheers.] If Slavery goes down in this war, it goes down as a necessary consequence and result of treason, and I say, "Amen." [Loud cheers.] I make no war upon Slavery. Don't misunderstand me: I am not here to preach a war against Slavery; but the authority of this Government must be maintained, the cause of human liberty must be maintained, and if, in doing so, the South is to be exterminated, let them go, rather than that we should suffer disunion. (Loud cheers.) This war has assumed dimensions which no one conceived six months ago. The South we now united to their determination to carry their point. They are coming now upon the North with all the strength and vigor that it is in their power to exert. Even now they are thundering at our Capital—at our Rome—and it may be that some disaster may yet reach us in regard to the National city, but I beg of you never to despair. It is not in the nature of things, if we are true to ourselves, that they can succeed in their purpose. There is a numerical force and a determination on the part of the loyal States that must, in the end crush it, but I am for crushing it at once. ("Good," and cheers.)

Ex-Alderman DOWLING was the next speaker. He said it was high time to adopt a more stringent course of measures—it was time that our Government should adopt a more stringent course of measures, and use all the powers that were within its command to sustain the national integrity. We had mistaken our foe; we had had Generals, not only in the field, but at home—Gen. GARRISON thrown in. [Great cheering.] We had under-estimated the Southern forces—their power, their aim, their concentration of power to try and put us down, when we were divided; but the time had come when we must unite and put them down. [Cheers.] After paying a passing compliment to the singular development of those tender qualities of the sex, by which the Southern ladies have so ostentatiously distinguished themselves, the speaker withdrew amid applause, which was vehemently renewed when the names of CONKLING, MEADE, BURNSIDE and SHERMAN were mentioned in turn, by voices in the crowd.

Rev. Dr. R. W. CLARK declared himself in favor of resisting force by force. He repudiated the idea of upholding party politics in this emergency. He announced himself to be of the party to which belonged the man who said he was a Free-Soil-Democrat-Whig-Republican. (Laughter.) He was for freedom from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, and he was a Democrat, (cheers,) and a Republican also. (Cheers.)

He thanked God that adopted citizens had, without hesitation or indecision, at once pressed their loyalty to the land of their adoption, and it was for us to say whether we had not cause to fear that the rebellion shall touch us, or that we shall crush the rebels.

Mr. W. E. ROBINSON followed in a speech which was vociferously cheered, especially by the Irish contingent of his audience, and by this more earnestly when he gave expression to his belief that the American flag ought always to be fought for, and the British flag always to be fought against.

Hon. E. T. WOOD, Mr. HAZEMAN, (of Brooklyn,) Mr. DRAKE, Mr. DEPEYSTER, and others, were then severally presented, and held the assemblage around this stand until after 10 o'clock, when, the proceedings being duly adjourned, the people quietly dispersed.

AT STAND NO. TWO,

His Honor the Mayor, S. S. POWELL, presided, and, on taking the chair, was received with three cheers, and proceeded, in a few remarks, to comment upon the present extraordinary position of the armies of the Union. He urged the immediate enlistment of the stalwart men before him, saying that though very likely they might meet wounds and death, yet if by it they would aid in the maintenance of the supremacy of the law, this would not have been in vain. He eulogized the bravery of the common people, and ridiculed the cowardice of the monied men of Wall-street, whose premonitions actions were controlled by the news and lying reports which came daily by the telegraph. We hope to make this meeting a practical one, and will go at once about it.

I have the pleasure of introducing to you Mr. E. P. WOOD.

was received with applause, and spoke substantially as follows: He said that though the audience before him had assembled in one of the darkest hours of the country's history, they were all met but for one purpose—the upholding of the Constitution and the supremacy of the law. He thought the determination of the Government to at last wake up from its Rip Van Winkle sleep was most encouraging and doubtless gratifying to the people. He thought the Government thus far had evinced anything but patriotic zeal or courageous determination to put down the rebellion. He trusted that we had now determined to do all we can to enforce the laws and put down the rebellion in earnest. He argued the ability of the Government to put an immediate stop to the nightly prayer-meetings held in our camps by Stonewall JACKSON. The ship of state was appropriately referred to and eulogized in good old-fashioned terms, to which was added the cheerful prophecy that beyond a doubt it would sail secure through all the gale, and reach the haven of the reunited country in safety. Mr. WOOD then gave the citizens of Brooklyn a sound scoring for its remissness in the matter of sending forth troops, and urged them by all means to at once go forth, secure recruits, and then go themselves. He thought that if we have not men enough in the field, the President should call for 1,000,000 more men.

He was followed by

who promised not to make a long speech, but to say something which would stimulate the Union men before him to do something for the good of the country. It is no matter what it may cost in blood or treasure—the Union must be preserved. [Cheers.] We are here to find ways and means to give our President the money and men which he has called for, and everything which gets in the way of this great Union track must be put down. [Cries of "Down with the Herald."] We want all the States and mean to have them, but our business now is to thrash them. That we'll do, and then take them by the hand until they out up another caper. In one respect we should follow the example of the Southerners—that is, we should be united as one man, present but one front, have but one voice. He deprecated the disgrace of the draft, and pleaded earnestly for volunteers, one of which is worth two drafted men. He insisted that all the wealthy men who own gas stocks, and all other kinds of stocks, should come forth and say we'll take care of the wives and families of all who go to the war. (Applause.) He said that Brooklyn has furnished more men than any other section of equal size in the Union. Now I will make a speech that will make you shout from the bottom of your stomachs. Mr. PETER RUCE says he'll give $500 for the support of the families of those who go to the war. [Cheers.]

Mr. E. L. NORTHRUP was then introduced, and made an effective speech, introducing a letter from Major MAYO, written to the citizens of Brooklyn some years since, abounding with patriotism and Union doctrine.

Mr. NORTHRUP was followed by

of the Third Senatorial Regiment. He said he wanted 100 men to follow him into the battle-field—volunteers; not drafted men. He was here to-night to enroll the names of the patriots who would follow him, who would at once put down their names, and accept the bounty of $250.

Mr. MARCUS MOORE followed in a patriotic strain, and was succeeded by of Brooklyn, who said that heretofore he had spoken in a partisan sense, for some party, but being out of that business now, he wished to say that the citizen who wasn't out of it was a traitor. [Cheers.] There should be no party which believed in anything save the Union and the Constitution. The man that we are after now, is the man who loves his country. He plished with merciless sarcasm into the sneaks who are querying, with piteous accents—"Do you think we'll succeed?" As for England's interfering, all I've got to say is, she interfered once before, and backed down. [Laughter.] There's only one way to put down this rebellion, and that's by force of arms. There's no such thing as compromise. [Cheers.] Show me a patriot who wants to compromise, and I'll show you a traitor. I hate, of all men, a traitor, whether he lives North or South, and, of the two, the meaner lives at the North. We should take the ground that these people are our personal enemies, treat them so, and put down the rebellion in less than six months. As one who had something to do with putting the Administration in power, he demanded an live and hearty and vigorous prosecution of the war. [Applause.] A war policy is needed. We want to give them bully-boo, just as they are trying to give it to us. They go in for the struggle, life or death, and I want to go in the same way; and I believe there is no idol in the army or out but the Union. And the General who declines to do his duty, let us decline to honor him.

Mr. MILLARD, Mr. KINGSLAND, Mr. BOWNER, and others, for whose efforts we have not room, spoke well and to the point.

The gathering at this stand was large, enthusiastic, and intelligently demonstrative, and doubtless much good will result from its proceedings.

STAND NUMBER THREE.

This stood on Remsen-street, was much the handsomer of the two side stands, and was brilliantly illuminated with clusters of gas lamps and beautifully decorated with festoons of the National colors and other gay flags. The superb building of the Brooklyn Gas Company close by, was also handsomely lighted on its whole front and an immense American banner was suspended from its upper windows across the street.

At 7½ P. M., the meeting was called to order by Ex-Mayor GEORGE HALL, who reminded the audience that the present meeting was but a continuation of the gathering which the storm on Monday evening had dispersed. Mr. HALL proceeded in a few remarks to allude to the evil tidings of the hour from the seat of war, and the imperative call of the country for succor.

The South was fighting with the utmost desperation. Her leaders knew that they are struggling with the halter about their necks, and their efforts are efforts for existence. With a bitter denunciation of the rebels and their aims, Mr. HALL concluded.

A fine band, stationed near the platform, performed the "Star-Spangled Banner," and the crowd, which had previously been respectable in numbers, meanwhile swelled to large proportions.

The first speaker introduced was the

HON. JAMES HUMPHREY,

Who said in substance that he felt oppressed in undertaking to address his fellow-citizens on so momentous a theme at so critical a moment, for that man who could bring himself up to the pitch of feeling that silently filled every bosom in that multitude must be an orator indeed. While he was crossing the ferry from New-York but an hour before, he had heard a group of citizens discussing the terrible news of the day, and among them the exclamation was loudly and repeatedly made that all this loss of blood and treasure was more than the negro was worth! [Strong expressions of assent and dissent in the audience.] While he, too, regretted that all this vast expenditure of life and means should be necessary, he could not miss by the great error under which so many really or seemingly labor in reference to the object and purpose of this war. He would, therefore, adopt the exclamation he had repeated as the theme and end of the remarks he had to make. Mr. HUMPHREY hereupon proceeded in an elaborate and prolonged argument to show that those who believe this to be a war for the negro, are either wofully mistaken or willfully perverted the truth; that primarily the war had no reference to the status of the black population of the South, although Slavery is, in one sense, the very root of the rebellion; that the contest is waged in defence of the principles of Republican liberty and the idea of a Democratic Government; that the statesmen of the South, wedded as they all are to the slaveholding interest,

FROM FORTRESS MONROE.

A Flag of Truce—Arrival of the Family of Ex-President Tyler—Sickness in the Rebel Capital—Another Iron-Clad.

FORT MONROE, Tuesday, Sept. 2.

The flag of truce has just arrived from Aiken's Landing (steamboat Mary Benton.) They took up Capt. MCCORMICK, the noted privateer, who captured the propeller Fanny at Hatteras Inlet, nearly a year ago. He has been privateering most of the time during the war, and I am informed he has been twice captured and paroled. He was last captured at Newbern, N. C.

The Mary Benton brought down the family of Ex-President JOHN TYLER, consisting of Mrs. TYLER and six small children. They are on their way North from City Point.

A lady from Richmond also came down, and says there is much sickness at Richmond, that the city is quite deserted. She heard nothing said of the late battles. The rebels are very confident of doing great execution with their iron-clad gunboats, when completed. No papers were brought down.

Cricket—Departure of Another Massachusetts Battery.

BOSTON, Wednesday, Sept. 3.

The New-York cricketers arrived here this morning, via Norwich and Worcester, quartering at the Bromfield House. They commenced their match at East Cambridge, against a selected eleven from the Boston, Lowell and Fall River Clubs, six of whom are Americans. The Massachusetts cricketers showed themselves first-rate batters and fielders, as well as the New-Yorkers.

After a fine cricket by both sides, the score stood this evening as follows: Massachusetts—First innings, 93; second innings, 57; and five men to go in. New-York—First innings, 64. The game will be resumed to-morrow.

The Ninth Massachusetts Battery left this afternoon for the seat of war.

FROM HILTON-HEAD.

Deserters from Savannah—Condition of the Rebel Forces—Failure of the Rebel Battery—The Nashville again Successful in Running the Blockade—Traitors in Camp.

One Special Correspondence.

HILTON-HEAD, S. C., Wednesday, Aug. 27, 1862.

Three deserters from the rebel army came down from Savannah four days since, and are in custody of Capt. VAN BUREN, the Provost-Marshal at this point. They are Northern men, one from Philadelphia, one from Chicago and one from Providence, R. I., and are evidently in high glee at having escaped from a service into which they were impressed, and which of late has been rendered unendurable by "short commons," and hard duties. I had a conversation with them, from whom I obtained a little information which may be of interest. They estimate the number of troops in and around Savannah at about 5,000, under the command of Brig.-Gen. MERCER, of Tattnall-ville. Many of the soldiers are sick with remittent fevers and a few cases of yellow fever had shown themselves in the City, one of which, that of a private in the First Georgia Regiment—a member of the company in which these deserters belonged—had proved fatal. The condition of the entire force, in consequence of sickness, want of medicines and proper food, is said to be spiritless, and a feeling of disgust at the rebellion is supreme.

Respecting the ram Fingal, their concurrent testimony is that our late alarm was groundless. She is not yet ready for action; and, although the work of plating her is still progressing, in their opinion some months will elapse before she can be finished. One of these men had seen her a few days prior to his leaving Savannah. He had also seen the floating battery, and his statement respecting her fully confirms what had been previously told us by negroes. She leaked at such a rate that two steam-pumps had to be used to keep her free; until, finally, all hope of making her useful was abandoned, when her guns were taken away, and she lies water-logged at the levee. The steamer which our scouts took to be the ram under way he believes was the river boat St. Johns making her bi-weekly trips to the Savannah Salt-Works, which are situated down the river in the direction of Fort Pulaski. At a distance her appearance would be very apt to mislead us into the belief that she was a mischievous craft.

The Nashville, with a full load of Enfield rifles, ordnance and drugs, ran the blockade of Warsaw Sound, as nearly as these men recollect, about six weeks since, discharging her cargo within seven miles of the city, and is now laden with cotton, watching a chance to get out again. Indeed, she made an attempt to escape ten nights ago, but her pilot ran her aground, for which he is suffering imprisonment. Now, however, she is again afloat. The steamer Emma, one of TATTNALL'S mosquito fleet, is also cotton loaded, and will attempt to get by Pulaski some dark night, and make for Nassau. The men give the names of WILLIAM HOTT, JAMES WILLIAMS and WILLIAM PECK. By forging a pass, permitting them to shoot cattle on Wilmington Island, they deceived the pickets, and got safely over to Fort Pulaski, bringing their rifles with them.

Among our matters of local interest is the arrest of DOMINICK BOZALY, JAMES WEBBS, MARCUS GUNN and JOHN DALY, employes in the Quartermaster's Department, who had been making themselves offensive by uttering treasonable sentiments against the Government. The proof against them was clear, and by order of Gen. HUNTER they are sentenced, until it be his pleasure to release them, each to wear a ball and chain and to hard labor in the Provost-Marshal's department. Their cases present features of an aggravated kind, and the promptness of Gen. HUNTER in dealing out justice will check other manifestations of treason among the laborers in the service of the Government.

The steamer Kersak, formerly of CUNARD's line, running between New-York and Nassau, put into this port last Sunday evening in distress. She ran ashore last April on one of the Bahama Keys, and, being badly damaged, was sold to speculators in New-York for $1,000. Her machinery was taken out, and an English steamer at Nassau was engaged to tow her to New-York. This steamer, the name of which has escaped my mind, got the Kersak somewhere in the latitude of Charleston, and there, without warning, cut her adrift. The wind was blowing strong and fair for Port Royal, and the Kersak, spreading what sail she could, shaped her course hither. She narrowly escaped wreck in attempting to run over the bar at the entrance of the harbor, for there was little more than three fathoms of water beneath her when one of our pilots went on board. The vessel now lies at our Quarantine ground, in a helpless condition; but arrangements will probably be made for towing her to her destination. The steamer which had the Kersak in tow is thought by many to have been one of the British vessels which rendezvous at Nassau for the purpose of running the blockade.

The steamer Delaware, which left here four weeks since, with Gen. TERRY and Staff, on a voyage of inspection to our posts along the coast as far as Key West, returned, yesterday, with a case of yellow fever on board in a convalescent stage. The vessel, of course has been placed in strict quarantine, and no apprehensions are felt by our medical authorities for the safety of our troops.

THURSDAY, Aug. 28—10 P. M.

P. S.—The gunboat Magnolia arrived to-day from a cruise, bringing intelligence to Admiral DUPONT of the total loss of the steam frigate Adirondack, Capt. GARRETSON, on the morning of Saturday, the 23d inst., at Man-of-War Point, Abaco Island, about 100 miles north of Nassau. No particulars of the disaster were forwarded. Capt. GARRETSON stated in his dispatch, that his men were all safe, and had taken refuge upon a small island in the vicinity of the wreck. He was of opinion that his armament could be saved. The gunboat Connecticut will leave here to-morrow morning to bring away the shipwrecked crew, and everything of value that can be saved from the wreck.

Persons at the North who have written to friends here must not be surprised at receiving no answers to some of their letters. The Connecticut brought us dates from the 16th to the 30d of August, and the dates previously received were up to the 12th, consequently, we have six days' mail unaccounted for. The mail bags were probably put on board a steamer, up for Port Royal, whose destination was afterwards changed.

Two mounted couriers, employed between headquarters and the outposts on Hilton Head Island, have been found dead on the road within a night or two. One, named EDWARD HICKEY, a corporal of the Sixth Connecticut Regiment, it is quite likely might have been killed by falling from his horse, as he was discovered, face downward, in a pool of water, with his neck broken. The other, named JOHN DEBRIEKE, belonging to the same regiment, was killed by a bullet. The Provost-Marshal has the case under investigation, and, doubtless, will develop whether we have rebel spies among us or not.

It is with very great pleasure that I am able to announce that Capt. CHAS. E. FULLER, late Chief Quartermaster of this Department, who was placed under arrest on the 1st of July, was to-day unconditionally released. No charges have been preferred against Capt. FULLER, and his sudden restoration to duty must have satisfied Gen. HUNTER that there was no ground upon which to base them. His release and restoration to duty will gratify his numerous friends in this Department and elsewhere, whose confidence in his probity and rectitude has never for a moment been shaken.

Commencement of Brown University.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Wednesday, Sept. 3.

At the Commencement of Brown University, to-day, the honorary degree of A. M. was conferred on A. E. MESSERVEY, of New-Hampton, N. H., and on Hon. W. P. SHERWOOD, of Newport, and the degree of LL.D. on Judge SHARLES, of this city.

The speaking at the dinner was wholly on the war. Eloquent speeches were made by Gov. WARRINGTON, ex-Governor Gov. ANDREW, of Massachusetts; Gov. BERRY, of New-Hampshire; Gov. SPRAGUE, Hon. R. F. TOWNE, of Massachusetts, and others. The spirit of all was in opposition to the war, was bold and courage, and the use of all our power.

PRINCETON COLLEGE.

The Students on the Great Question of the Day—War Meeting—Speeches by Professors, Gov. Olden of New-Jersey, Dr. Magill of the Theological Seminary, and Others—Students Enlisting—Formation of an "Independent Artillery Company," &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

COLLEGE OF NEW-JERSEY,
PRINCETON, Tuesday, Sept. 2, 1862.

Notice having been given, on the afternoon of Aug. 28, that a war meeting would be held in the Gymnasium, at 7½ P. M., at that hour the students assembled there, en masse. The Gymnasium was finely decorated with the National colors; and at the hour named, Mr. C. F. CLARK took the chair, and Mr. R. VANZANDT was appointed Secretary. It was then moved and carried that a committee of one from each Class be appointed to draw up resolutions and hasten enlistments. The Committee were as follows: F. Reeder, Class of 1863; Jacobus, 1864; Vandam Green, 1865; Wyckoff, 1866. The resolutions of the Senior Class were then called for and read; and, no exception having been made, were adopted. Like wise those of the other Classes. After the reading of the resolutions, numerous of the several classes were called upon to make a few remarks. The following named gentlemen made speeches: Seniors—Hamilton, Hayt, Cox, Miller, Kobrlein; Juniors—Vanderpool, Fuller, Stearns; Sophomores—Petty and Converse; also, Mr. J. Jones, of the Class of 1863.

Others were then introduced who delivered appropriate and stirring addresses. The members of the different classes were then requested to sign their names to their several rolls, and with the following gratifying result: 24 seniors, 22 juniors, 19 sophomores, and 16 freshmen.

The meeting then adjourned, when it was proposed that music be procured and a procession be formed consisting of students to perambulate the several streets. The procession then formed, and the following gentlemen were detailed as Marshals: Senior, F. REMAN; Junior, FULLER; Sophomores, VANBRUNT GREEN; Freshman, ——. The procession marched now to the stirring notes of the "fife and the drum," now the music of their own clear voices singing the good old songs of Nassau, and "The Girl I Left Behind Me." After marching and countermarching, the students finally directed their steps towards the residence of Gov. OLDEN, and halting, such a shout arose as shook the branches of the stately evergreens, as they were never shaken before. Silence having been in a measure restored, the Governor came forward and spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN: I thank you for the honor shown me. I have just arrived from Trenton, where I have been during the past week, busily engaged in business of importance, and am very weary. I hope, therefore, you will excuse me from addressing you this evening.

With three cheers for the Governor, the happy procession were again in motion, and with songs and jokes marched on. Arriving at the house of Dr. MACRIE, he was called upon, and spoke substantially as follows:

He was very happy to meet us. He felt very glad to learn that we were making such strong efforts to preserve the Union. The best way, he said, for you to preserve the Union, was to obtain a good sound education. You will be needed after the war. The literary and scientific training which you receive here is better than the military education which you receive at West Point. I would rather have it than a West Point education. Gentlemen, I bid you good evening.

Dr. MACRIE having retired, we marched onward amid the beating of drums and singing and cheering of the students, to the residence of Mr. HARRIMAN, who gave us a short, pithy and patriotic address.

Then came the street in which reside most of the Professors of the College. Prof. CAMPBELL was first called upon, but a gentleman answering the call, very politely informed us that "He was very sorry to say to the gentlemen that Prof. CAMPBELL was not at home." As a compensation, in part, he would propose three cheers for the Union. The "Three cheers" were given with a hearty good will, and again the order "Forward, march!" was given. Prof. GUYOT did not respond. Prof. STEPHEN ALEXANDER, being called on, made some very eloquent and stirring remarks. Our venerable Professor was next requested to "hold forth." On mounting the rostrum he said that he feared our minds were not in the condition in which they ought to be in view of the coming Sabbath. He would address us at the Chapel the next morning.

Dr. MACILVAIN was too unwell, so our next speech was to be obtained from our much respected Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy, Dr. ATWATER, who said that he presumed that this exhibition was in consequence of the recent cheering news from the seat of war. He was happy to witness this exhibition of such patriotism among the students. He hoped that this struggle would soon come to a happy termination, and that the country would soon be restored to its former peace and greatness. Other remarks after the same strain were delivered, and the Doctor retired amid the applause of the audience. After a short interval, the students dispersed, being gratified with the speeches, with the result of the meeting, and with each other.

Thus ended the war meeting at Nassau Hall. A delegation of students went to Trenton yesterday, and held an interview with the Governor concerning the matter of accepting the Student Company as an "Independent Artillery Company." The Governor gave them every encouragement. We understand that the "Independent Artillery Company" intend to solicit the cooperation of other colleges North of Mason and Dixon's line, to aid in raising the required number, 154. When that number is obtained the company will go into camp, and, after drilling, will enter the areas.
